Nelson. Introduc. to Penmanship; five books, N. York.

Nelson, Rev. Lord, Earl Nelson, the representative of Baron Nelson, of the Nile. 1. Form of Family Prayer, with Special Offices for the Seasons, Lon., 1852, fp. 8vo; 3d ed., 1854, 24mo.

"We have seen no reason to depart from the opinion we expressed of it some years ago —that it is the best manual of the kind which we possess."—Lon. Chris. Remembrancer.

2. A Calendar of Lessons for Every Day in the Year, 1857, 24mo. Specially compiled for use with the third edition of his Form of Family Prayer.

"Earl Nelson's 'Calendar' supplies, on an excellent principle, a lectionary companion, so to speak, to any system of family worship. . . . Such a 'Calendar' has long been wanted; and the pains bestowed on the present one ought to render it widely acceptable to Churchmen."—Lon. Chris. Rememb.

Nelson, Lieut.-Col. Lockspeise; or, The Study of the German Language, Lon., 1855, 8vo.

Nelson, Abraham. Antichrist [O. Cromwell] and his False Prophet, [John Presbyter, or John Covenanter,] Lon., 1660, 4to.

Nelson, Rev. David, M.D., d. 1844, aged about 51, a convert from infidelity, devoted his latter years to preaching, and pub. an excellent work entitled Cause and Cure of Infidelity, N. York, 12mo. Several eds. in America and England. Among the last edits. are N. York, 1849, 12mo; Lon., 1853, 12mo; edited by Rev. E. Bickersteth, 1853, 18mo; edited by Rev. G. A. Rogers, 1854, 12mo. See Amer. Bib. Repertory, x. 89, (by A. D. Eddy.)

Nelson, Robert, 1656–1715, a learned layman, a Non-juror until 1709, has been already noticed in our life of Bishop Bull. Among his works are: 1. A Companion for the Festivals and Feasts of the Church of England, Lon., 1704, 8vo. Many edits.; last edits., Lon., 1843, 8vo; 1849, 12mo. Abridged with Notes by John Poynder, 1848, fp. 8vo. See Neale, E. V., No. 1.

"The excellent Mr. Nelson's 'Festivals and Feasts,' which has, I understand, the greatest sale of any book ever printed in England except the Bible, is a most valuable help to devotion; and in addition to it I would recommend two sermons on the same subject by Mr. [Joseph Holden] Pott, Archdeacon of St. Alban's, equally distinguished for piety and elegance."—Dr. Johnson: Boswell's Life of Johnson, ed. 1848, r. 8vo, 487.

"This work once had a most extensive circulation. There is serious religion, but a great want of evangelical principles and unction. He held Bishop Bull's views on justification."—Bickersteth's C. S., 1844, 429.

2. The Great Duty of Frequenting the Christian Sacrifice, 1707, 8vo; last ed., 1841, 12mo. 3. The Practice of True Devotion, 1708, 8vo; last ed., 1849, 8vo. 4. Life of Dr. George Bull, 1713, 8vo; last ed., 1840, 18mo.

"One of the finest pieces of theological biography in the English language."—Williams's C. P., 1843, 345.

"To be read for practical edification; but Nelson views too favourably the sentiments of its author [subject?]."—Bickersteth's C. S., 524.

See Bull, George, D.D.

5. Letter on the Trinity, against Dr. Clarke, 1714, 8vo. See Clarke, Samuel, D.D.; Knight, James, D.D.; Darling's Cyc. Bibl., vol. i. 1739. 6. The Whole Duty of a Christian, 1718, 8vo. Justice of Peace, Lon., 1710, 8vo; 12th ed., 1745, 8vo. 3. Rights of the Clergy, 1715, 8vo; The Savoy, 1732, 8vo. 4. Lex Testamentaria, Lon., 1714, '24, '28, 8vo. 5. Lutwyche's Reports and Entries, 1718, fol.: see Lutwyche, Sir Edward. 6. Lex Maneriorum, 1724, fol.; 1728, '33, '35, 8vo. 7. Chancery Reports 25 Car. II.–33 Car. II., 1673–1681, 1725, fol.: see 3 Atk., 334; 10 Ves., Jr., 582; 1 Wils., 162; Marvin's Leg. Bibl., 184; Wallace's Reporters, 303; Finch, Heneage, first Earl of Nottingham. 8. Abridgt. of the Common Law of England, 1725, 3 vols. fol.

"Nelson's is chiefly borrowed from Hughes; and, though the author was a very harsh and unsparing critic on the labors of others, his own have a general character of incorrectness stamped upon them, and have fallen into utter neglect."—Judge Story: N. Amer. Rev., xxiii. 7; and in Story's Miscell. Writings, 1852, 386.

See also Pref. 13 Viner; Bridg. Leg. Bibl., 227.

9. Law of England concerning the Games of Hunting, Hawking, Fishing, and Fowling, 1727, '32, '51, '53, '62, 12mo.

Mr. Nelson is supposed to have been the editor of 5th Modern; and Mr. Wallace thinks it probable that he "may have had an editorial supervision over all the volumes of Modern, giving to some more, and to some less, of his own labor and stupidity."—Wallace's Reporters, 233.

Nennius, or Ninnius, Abbot of Bangor, is supposed by some to have flourished about the beginning of the seventh century; but it is quite uncertain whether such a person ever really flourished at all, or whether the book which bears his name, Historia Britonum, (purporting to have been written in 858!) is the work of some anonymous writer of the twelfth century. The evidences of forgery are too clear to be reasonably denied. A writer in the London Gentleman's Magazine, June, 1857, 710, (Roffensis,) betrays a sad ignorance on this subject in his haste to correct Dr. Giles's Pref. to his Six Old English Chroniclers, 1847, 12mo: (Nennius is one of the six.) Nennius's Chronicle has already claimed our notice more than once in the preceding pages: see Gildas; Gunn, Rev. Wm.; Herbert, Hon. Algernon, No. 4. For further information we refer the reader to Bertrand's and Gale's Collections; Tanner; Leland; Bale; Pits; Wright's Biog. Brit. Lit., Anglo-Saxon Period, 135–142; The Fountains of British History Explored, 1853, 18mo; Mr. Joseph Stevenson Nennii Historia Britonum, ad fidem Codicum MSS. recensuit, 1838, 8vo, (Eng. Hist. Soc.)

"The tract which goes under the name of Nennius is, as might be supposed from what has been said above, of very little historical value; but it derives a certain degree of importance from those very parts which are least historical."—Wright: ubi supra, 140.

Neville, Morgan, 1786?–1839, a native of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, the son of General Presley Neville, and grandson of General Daniel Morgan, both distinguished officers of the American Revolutionary army, was for some time editor of the Pittsburg Gazette; removed to Cincinnati about 1824; became secretary of an Insurance-Company, and amused his leisure hours by contributing to the periodicals of that city. He acquired a wide reputation by his graphic tale of Mike Fink, the Last of the Boatmen, pub. in the Western Souvenir for 1829.

"He was a good scholar, a man of genius and taste, a lover of the fine arts, a skilful musician, an accomplished gentleman, a constant patron and promoter of letters and the liberal arts. He was one of the chief pioneers of literature in the West."—Judge James Hall, in a Letter to the Author of this Dictionary, Cin., Jan. 15, 1857.

Whilst upon the subject of "the pioneers of Western literature," we must not omit to make honourable mention of John P. Foote, of Cincinnati, President of the Mechanics' Institute and of the Trustees of Ohio Medical College, and formerly editor of the Cincinnati Literary Gazette, established in 1824.

"He has spent the greater part of a long and honorable life in the encouragement of letters, learning, and the useful arts, and in tic promotion of benevolent and public-spirited enterprises."—Judge James Hall: ubi supra.

Newcomb, Harvey, b. 1803, in Thetford, Mass., ordained a minister in the Congregational Church, first settled in West Needham, Mass., in 1842. Mr. Newcomb has been a most voluminous and a most useful author. Between the years 1831 and '54 he gave to the world no less than 105 volumes,—religious, historical, moral, &c.,—comprising a total of 10,224 pages; and up to the year 1853 about 65,000,000 of pages of his writings had been circulated in the United States. Of the publications of the American Sunday-School Union forty-nine are from his pen. Among these are 14 vols. of Church Histories and 12 Question-Books. Among the most important of his works are: 1. Manners and Customs of the N. American Indians, Pittsburgh, 2 vols. 18mo. 2. Pastor's Gift, 18mo. 3. Child's Scripture Library, 7 Nos. 24mo. 4. Young Lady's Guide, N. York, 1839, 12mo. 10,000 sold to 1858. 5. How to be a Man, Bost., 1846, 18mo. 6. How to be a Lady, 1846, 18mo. 34,500 of Nos. 5 and 6 sold to 1858. 7. Anecdotes for Boys, 1846, 18mo. 8. Anecdotes for Girls, 18mo. 24,500 of Nos. 7 and 8 sold to 1858. 9. Cyclopædia of Missions, 1854, 8vo; 4th ed., 1856, 8vo, pp. 800. Mr. Newcomb was from 1826 to '29 editor of The Western Star; in 1829–30, of The Buffalo Patriot; and in 1851–52 associate editor of the New York Observer. He was a regular contributor to the Boston Recorder from 1837 to '42, and to the Youth's Companion for a much longer period. He also contributed to the columns of The Puritan Recorder and The New York Evangelist.

Newcomb, Thomas, D.D., 1675–1766? Rector of Stopham, Sussex, 1734, a great-grandson of Spenser the poet, pub. a number of poems, original and translated, 1718–63. His best-known production is Bibliotheca, pub. in vol. iii. of Nichols's Select Collection of Miscellany Poems, 1718. See Nichols's Poems; Chalmers's Biog. Dict.

"Many other harmonies of the gospel have been published, but none preferable to this."—Bp. Watson.

"It throws much light on many passages of the evangelists."—Orme's Bibl. Bib.

"It has long been held in the highest estimation"—Horne's Bibl. Bib., 1839, 133.

"Archbishop Newcome's Harmony—though no harmony is perfect—furnishes, perhaps, the best groundwork for any future publication on the subject."—Lon. Chris. Observer.

An English ed., with some alterations from the Greek Original, [by Wm. Phillips,] was pub. Lon., 1802, 8vo; and a reprint of this last, with slight differences, appeared 1827, 8vo. See Horne's Bibl. Bib., 133.

"The form in which this work [1802, 8vo] is printed is extremely convenient; so much so that they who can use the Greek may be glad to consult the English octavo rather than the unwieldy folio of the archbishop."—Brit. Crit., O.S., xxii. 437.

"The English [1802, 8vo; 1827, 8vo] furnishes a very convenient book for examining the respective accounts."—Bickersteth's C. S., 1844, 385. See No. 10.

In 1780, 4to, Dr. Joseph Priestly pub. an English version of his Greek Harmony of the Evangelists, and prefixed to it a letter, in which he argued that the duration of our Saviour's ministry was very little, if any, longer than one year; whereas Archbishop Newcome contends that it comprised three years and a half. This view he enforced in (5) The Duration of our Lord's Ministry Particularly Considered; in reply to a Letter from Dr. Priestly on that subject prefixed to his English Harmony of the Evangelists, 1780, 12mo.

"It contains many shrewd and judicious observations on various parts of the gospel history. A reply by Newcome to a second letter from Dr. Priestly appeared the following year."—Orme's Bibl. Bib.

6. Observations on our Lord's Conduct as a Divine Instructor, and on the Excellence of his Moral Character, 1782, 4to; 1795, 8vo; 1820, 8vo; 1852, 8vo.

"This work, though not critical or expository, contains many things worthy of attention, though I do not accord in all its views."—Orme's Bibl. Bib.

7. An Attempt towards an Improved Version, a Metrical Arrangement, and an Explanation of the Twelve Minor Prophets, 1785, 4to; Pontefract, 1809, r. 8vo. This ed. contains the most important of Bp. Horsley's criticisms on Hosea and those of Dr. Blayney on Zechariah. There are numerous errata in the Hebrew words. Enlarged and improved, Lon., 1836, 8vo. This ed. was edited by J. Harrison, of Hoxton. This work is a continuation of Lowth's and Blayney's translations of the prophets. Dr. Newcome illustrates the text by references to Eastern manners and customs as recorded by modern travellers.

"As a commentator the learned prelate has shown an intimate acquaintance with the best critics, ancient and modern. His own observations are learned and ingenious."—Lon. Month. Rev., O. S., lxxvi. 58.

"His version is always distinct: his notes are chiefly verbal, but contain many classical allusions."—Orme's Bibl. Bib.

8. An Attempt towards an Improved Version, a Metrical Arrangement, and an Explanation of the Prophet Ezekiel, Dubl., 1788, 4to; Lon., 1836, 8vo.

"The numerous admirers of that valuable production [No. 7] will find not less to commend in the present work. . . . He successfully employs his solid judgment and effectual learning in the elucidation of a writer who has been called the Æschylus of Hebrew poetry."—Lon. Month. Rev., N. S., iv. 1.

"It is a monument of the learning and diligence of the bishop. The preface is very valuable, and deserves to be read along with Lowth's preliminary dissertation to Isaiah."—Orme's Bibl. Bib.

9. A Review of the Chief Difficulties in the Gospel History respecting our Lord's Resurrection: intended to Retract some Errors contained in the Author's Greek Harmony, and to shew that Dr. Benson's Hypothesis is Satisfactory, 1791, 4to. This tract must accompany No. 4: see Benson, George, D.D. 10. An Historical View of the English Biblical Translations; the Expediency of Revising, by Authority, our Present Translation; and the Means of Executing such a Revision, Dubl., 1792, 8vo. The historical part of this work is based upon Lewis's work, but Newcome's arrangement has been preferred; and the list of translations is brought down to 1790: see Lewis, John, 1675–1746, No. 4; Cotton, Henry, LL.D.; Johnson, Rev. Anthony.

11. The Duty of Clerical Residence Stated and Enforced: A Charge in 1796, 1796, 8vo. 12. An Attempt towards Revising our English Translation of the Greek Scriptures, or The New Covenant of Jesus Christ; and towards Illustrating the Sense by Philological and Explanatory Notes, 1796, 2 vols. r. 8vo. This work was indeed printed in 1796, but was not published—circulated—until 1809, after the author's death. The author of the Life of Archbishop Newcome in Chalmers's Biographical Dictionary, xxiii. 114, 1815, commits a grave error when he asserts that this translation is the same as the Socinian version pub. Lon., 1808, 8vo. The title of the latter work might have prevented this misstatement: The New Testament in an Improved Version, upon the basis of Archbishop Newcome's new Translation; with a Corrected Text and Notes Critical and Explanatory, &c.

"This version," remarks Dr. Horne, "is avowedly made to support the modern Socinian scheme; for, though the late learned Archbishop Newcome's name is specified in the title-page as a kind of model, his authority is disregarded whenever it militates against the creed of the anonymous editors. The errors and perversions of this translation have been most ably exposed," &c.

See a list of the critics in Horne's Bibl. Bib., 304.

Orme remarks of Newcome's version,

"The character of this work has been materially injured by the so called 'Improved Version' of the Unitarians, pretending to be placed on the basis of Archbishop Newcome's,—by which it is basely insinuated that the primate was a Socinian. Nothing can be more false. The work is strictly orthodox . . . all the great points relating to the divinity and atonement of Christ."—Bibl. Bib.

Mr. Bickersteth makes no other comment on the archbishop's version than "Many useful suggestions and notes. Very scarce."—Christian Student, 409.

For further information respecting this learned and industrious divine, see Rees's Cyclopædia; Lon. Gent. Mag., lxx.

"The critical labours of Newcome," remarks Mr. Orme, "are all very respectable, and do credit both to his feelings as a Christian and his understanding as a scholar. They are all deserving of a place in every good theological library."—Bibl. Bib.

Newman, Francis William, son of the late John Newman, banker, of the firm of Ramsbottom, Newman & Co., Lombard Street, and a brother of John Henry Newman, D.D., (post,) was b. in London, 1805; educated at the Rev. Dr. Nicholas's school at Ealing, and at Worcester College, Oxford, where, in 1826, he took first-class honours in classics and mathematics; Fellow of Balliol College, 1826–30; travelled in Turkey, (see No. 19,) 1830–33; Classical Tutor in Bristol College, 1834–40; Classical Professor at Manchester New College, 1840–46; Professor of the Latin Language and Literature in University College, London, 1846 to the present date, (1858.) Professor Newman enjoys a wide reputation for proficiency in various departments of scholarship, and is not less known for certain peculiarities of political and religious opinions, which he has illustrated and enforced in several of his publications. He has given to the world: 1. A Grammar of the Berber Language. 2. Lects. on Logic, 1838, 12mo. 3. The Difficulty of Elementary Geometry, i. e., on Straightness, Levelness, Curvature, and Parallelism, treated in a Method wholly Peculiar, Lon., 1841, 8vo; 1844, 8vo. 4. Trans. of Prof. V. A. See also Brownson's Quar. Rev., 2d Ser., v. 417; James Martineau's Miscellanies. In 1852, Mr. Henry Rogers pub. a work entitled The Eclipse of Faith; or, A Visit to a Religious Sceptic.

"The author's main design is to apply Butler's great argument to some recent modifications of Deism. . . . The principal representative of Deism in the dialogue is a disciple of Mr. Francis Newman, whose writings are made to supply a large contribution to this species of entertainment."—Lon. Quar. Rev., Oct. 1854.

In the second edit. of The Phases of Faith, 1853, Mr. Newman added A Reply to Eclipse of Faith; and this Reply elicited a response from Mr. Rogers, entitled A Defence of the Eclipse of Faith; 2d ed., 1854. Newman, John Henry, D.D., eldest brother of Francis William Newman, (ante,) was b. in London, Feb. 21, 1801; educated at the Rev. Dr. Nicholas's school at Ealing, and at Trinity College, Oxford, gaining a scholarship in 1818; elected Fellow of Oriel College, 1822; ordained deacon and priest in the Church of England, 1824; Vice-Principal of Alban Hall, 1825–26; tutor in Oriel College, 1826–31; Public Examiner, 1827–28; Vicar of St. Mary's, Oxford, 1828–43; one of the Select University Preachers, 1830–32; entered the communion of the Roman Catholic Church in 1845, and in 1848 introduced from Rome a branch of the Congregation of the Oratory founded by St. Philip Neri. Dr. Newman resided at Birmingham as head of the oratory until 1852, when he was appointed rector of the New Roman Catholic University at Dublin. Of the "Oxford Tract Movement," which was commenced in 1833, Dr. Newman was one of the principal leaders, and may claim much of the honour—whatever that may be—which belongs to the organization, and all of the distinction to be awarded to the closing, of this famous series, —his last contribution, No. 90, giving so much offence to a portion of the ecclesiastical dignitaries and laity of the church that the Bishop of Oxford requested a discontinuance of these publications. Dr. Newman's principal coadjutors in the authorship of the Oxford Tracts were Messrs. Keble, Pusey, Palmer, Perceval, and Williams. We shall refer to this subject again before closing this article. The following is a list of Dr. Newman's publications: 1. The Arians of the Fourth Century, 1833, 8vo; 1834, 8vo. Reviewed in Edin. Rev., lxiii. 44. Commended by another authority as "An excellent work, well worthy of the notice of all ecclesiastical or other students."

2. The Restoration of Suffragan Bishops Recommended, 1835, 8vo. 3. Parochial Serms., 6 vols. 8vo: i., 2d ed., 1835; ii., 2d ed., 1836; 5th ed., 1851; iii., 3d ed., 1840; iv., 2d ed., 1839, 8vo; v., 1840; vi., 1845; new ed., vols. i.–vi., 1838–44. Selections from vols. i.–iv., 1841, 12mo. The British Critic remarks that Newman's Parochial Sermons contain "a great profusion of Christian wisdom." 4. Lects. on the Prophetical Office of the Church, viewed relatively to Romanism and Popular Protestantism, 1837, 8vo; 2d ed., 1838, 8vo. See Nevile, Rev. Christopher, No. 1.

"These lectures, as far as in their very form goes, are chiefly written against Romanism, though their main object is not controversy, but edification."—Introduction.

5. Letter to the Rev. Godfrey Fausset, D.D., on certain Points of Faith and Practice, 1838, 8vo. 6. Lects. on Justification, 1838, 8vo; 2d ed., 1840, 8vo. See Eclec. Rev., 4th Ser., vii. 631; Brit. Critic, xxiv. 82. 7. Letter to the Rev. R. W. Jelf, D.D., in Explanation of No. 90 in the Series called the Tracts for the Times, by the Author; 2d ed., 1841, 8vo. 8. The Church of the Fathers; 2d ed., 1842, p. 8vo. 9. The Ecclesiastical History of M. l'Abbé Fleury, edited by Dr. Newman, 1842–44, 3 vols. 8vo. 10. Serms. bearing on Subjects of the Day, 1843, 8vo; 2d ed., 1848, 8vo. 11. Serms., chiefly on the Theory of Religious Belief, preached before the University of Oxford, 1843, 8vo; 2d ed., 1844, 8vo. 12. An Essay on the Miracles recorded in the Ecclesiastical History of the Early Ages, 1843, 8vo. Also published in No. 9, vol. i. 13. Lives of the English Saints, by Dr. Newman and others, 1844–45, 14 vols. p. 8vo. 14. An Essay on the Development of Christian Doctrine, 1845, 8vo; 2d ed., 1846, 8vo. See Letters on Romanism, a Reply to Dr. Newman's Essay on Development, by Rev. Dissertatiunculæ quædam Criticæ Theologicæ, Romæ, 1847, 8vo. 16. Loss and Gain, 1848, 12mo: anon. 17. Discourses addressed to Mixed Congregations, 1849, 8vo; 2d ed., 1850, 8vo. 18. Lects. on Certain Difficulties felt by Anglicans in submitting to the Catholic Church, 1850, 8vo. 19. Lects. on the Present Position of Catholics in England, addressed to the Brothers of the Oratory, 1851, 8vo. 20. Lects. on the History of the Turks in its Relation to Christianity, 1853, 12mo; 1854, 12mo. 21. Office and Work of Universities, 1856, 12mo. Dr. Newman is the author of a number of valuable articles (Cicero, Apollonius Tyanæus, &c.) in the Encyclopædia Metropolitana. Of these, some have been pub., with articles by other contributors, in separate volumes: see Hist. of Greek and Roman Philosophy and Science, by the Bishop of London, Rev. Dr. Whewell, Rev. Dr. Newman, &c., cr. 8vo; Hist. of Roman Literature, by Dr. Arnold, Rev. H. Thompson, Rev. J. H. Newman, Rev. E. Smedley, Rev. J. B. Ottley, &c., 2d ed., revised and enlarged, 1852, p. 8vo.

We promised to return to the Tractarian controversy,—not to proffer any speculations of our own upon topics which have elicited such contradictory opinions from much wiser men, but simply to refer the reader to several sources of information, in addition to the volumes upon both sides of the question which have already been, and are yet to be, noticed in the pages of this Dictionary. Newton, Sir Isaac, Dec. 25, 1642 (O. S.)–March 20, 1727, the most illustrious of natural philosophers and one of the most excellent of men, was a native of Woolsthorpe, near Colsterworth, Lincolnshire; the only child of Isaac Newton, proprietor and farmer of the manor of Woolsthorpe, by his wife Hannah, the daughter of James Ayscough, of Market Overton, Rutlandshire. Mrs. Newton was left a widow several months before the birth of her child, who came into the world some time before he was expected, and with such little prestige of greatness that the philosopher whose fame was to fill the world could have been readily accommodated in a quart mug. The infant was not only very small, but apparently so feeble that little hopes were entertained of his living until a tonic could be procured from some one of the kind wives of the neighbourhood, who are always ready with sympathies, benedictions, and medicinal herbs on such interesting occasions. Two of these good creatures, whose knowledge of the pharmacopœia or stock of remedies was too limited for their desire of usefulness, were hastily despatched to a great woman of the vicinity,—Lady Pakenham, of North Witham,—to invoke her kind offices in behalf of the little stranger who lay gasping in a strait betwixt life and death. It was a day for all good deeds,—

> "The happy morn
> Wherein the Son of Heaven's Eternal King,
> Of wedded Maid and Virgin Mother born,
> Our great redemption from above did bring;"— and we doubt not that both the humble messengers who braved the rigour of the winter's day, and the noble dispenser of the healing balm which rewarded their pains, felt a peculiar pleasure in thus ministering to the necessities of the widow and the fatherless. How great then would have been their exultation—how profound their adoration of the mysterious providence of the great Father of the human family—could they have foreseen that, in the feeble infant whose life was thus preserved by their agency, all future generations were to recognise the chosen interpreter of the laws of Nature to an admiring world!

Before the child had reached his fourth year, his mother contracted a second marriage with the Rev. Barnabas Smith, Rector of North Witham, and the immediate care of Isaac devolved upon his grandmother, Mrs. Ayscough, who now took up her residence at Woolsthorpe. After acquiring the rudiments of an English education at day-schools at Skillington and Stoke, the youth, at the age of twelve, was sent to the public academy at Grantham, where he was first noted for his inattention and backwardness, and subsequently for such zeal in the pursuit of knowledge that the highest position in the whole school was not thought too great a reward for his merits. It is to be noted that the youthful Newton, during the days of his apparent indolence, did not, like Paley of a future day, waste his hours in inglorious sloth, but had his mind and hands busily employed in the invention and manufacture of ingenious machines, such as windmills, water-clocks, and miniature carriages to be propelled by hand. On the death of his step-father in 1656, Newton's mother left the rectory of North Witham and returned to Woolsthorpe, and the young student, who had now reached his fifteenth year, was summoned to the charge of the farm, the raising of produce, and the superintendence of the sale thereof at Grantham market. The boy obeyed his mother, but he was an unwilling Cincinnatus: his heart was not in his work. On market-days, we are told,

"On account of his youth, his mother used to send a trusty old servant along with him, to put him in the way of business. Their inn was at the Saracen's Head, in West gate, where, as soon as they had put up their horses, Isaac generally left the man to manage the marketing, and, retiring to Mr. Clark's garret, where he used to lodge, entertained himself with a parcel of old books till it was time to go home again; or else he would stop by the way between home and Grantham, and lie under a hedge studying, till the man went to town and did the business and called upon him in his way back. When at home, if his mother ordered him into the fields to look after the sheep, the corn, or upon any other rural employment, it went on very heavily under his management. His chief delight was to sit under a tree with a book in his hands, or to busy himself with his knife in cutting wood for models of somewhat or other that struck his fancy; or he would get to a stream and make mill-wheels."

Under such a master, who would neither "hold the plough nor drive," it was evidently unreasonable to look for much profit from the farm. Isaac, therefore, was permitted to return to his studies at Grantham School, and in June, 1661, we find him admitted sub-sizar at Trinity College, Cambridge. He became a Bachelor of Arts in 1665, a Junior Fellow in 1667, and Master of Arts in 1668. Once at college, with none of the petty annoyances of business life and household detail to distract his attention, the genius of Newton soon gave evidence of those amazing powers which were to attract the eyes of the great philosophers of Europe to the studious recluse of Trinity College. As early as May 20, 1665, he committed to writing his first discovery of Fluxions; in November of the same year he drew up a paper on Fluxions, with their application to the drawing of tangents and "the finding the radius of curvity of any curve;" and about the same time (in the autumn of 1665) his attention was first directed to the subject of Gravity.

"Neither Pemberton nor Whiston," says Sir David Brewster, who received from Newton himself the story of his first ideas of gravity, "records the story of the falling apple. It was mentioned, however, to Voltaire by Catherine Barton, Newton's niece, and to Mr. Green by Martin Folkes, the President of the Royal Society. We saw the apple-tree in 1814, and brought away a portion of one of its roots. The tree was so much decayed that it was taken down in 1720, and the wood of it carefully preserved by Mr. Turnor, of Stoke Rocheford. See Voltaire's Philosophie de Newton, 3me part. chap. iii.; Green's Philosophy of Expansive and Contractive Forces, p. 972; and Rigaud's Hist. Essay, p. 2."—Life of Sir Isaac Newton, 1855, i. 27, n.; and see ii. 416, n.

We have already had occasion, in our life of Newton's distinguished mathematical teacher, Dr. Isaac Barrow, to refer to Newton's collegiate years. We there saw (pp. 130–133, ante) that in 1669 the pupil succeeded his master in the Lucasian chair of Mathematics, and we referred to the emphatic testimony to the genius of the former prefixed to Barrow's Optical Lectures, pub. in the year when he resigned his professorship.

"Verum quod tenellæ matres facitant," says Barrow, "a me depulsum partum amicorum haud recusantium nutriciæ curæ commisi, prout ipsis visum esset, educandum aut exponendum, quorum unus (ipsos enim honestum duco nominatim agnoscere) D. Isaacus Newtonus, collega noster (peregregiæ vir indolis ac insignis peritiæ) exemplar revisit, aliqua corrigenda monens, sed et de suo nonulla penu suggerens quæ nostris alicubi cum laude innexa cernes. [imprimatur, Mart., 1668–69.]"—Epist. ad Lectorem.

The other friend, whom he styles the Mersennus of our nation, was John Collins, the author of Commercium Epistolicum, &c.

It cannot be ascertained when Newton made his first optical discoveries; but, at the time when he assisted Barrow in his work on Optics just referred to, he seems to have been greatly in the dark on the subject:

"In the Twelfth Lecture," remarks Sir David Brewster, "there are some observations on the nature and origin of colours which are so erroneous and unphilosophical that Newton could not have permitted his friend to publish them had he been then in the possession of their true theory," &c.—Life of Newton, i. 28.

To these remarks it occurs to us to append a note, which of course applies to a later stage of Newton's researches in this department:

"Optics had made so great a stride under the genius of Newton that little remained to be gleaned by future observers; but yet BREWSTER has added much to the circle of our knowledge in the polarization of light, and added a new element in the production of harmonious beauty in the changes of the kaleidoscope."—SIR ARCHIBALD ALISON: Hist. of Europe, 1815–1852, chap. v.

It was in the autumn of 1668 that Newton, after a number of attempts to improve the refracting telescope, constructed his small reflecting telescope, and soon produced a second and a better one. Some of the members of the Royal Society heard of his success and urged him to send his instrument for their inspection.

"This telescope consisted of a concave metallic speculum, the radius of the curvature of which was 12⅔ or 13 inches, so that 'it collected the sun's rays at the distance of 6⅓ inches.' The rays reflected by the speculum were received upon a plane metallic speculum, inclined 45° to the axis of the tube, so as to reflect them to the side of the tube, in which there was an aperture to receive a small tube with a plano-convex eyeglass, whose radius was one-twelfth of an inch, by means of which the image formed by the speculum was magnified 38 times."

Newton complied with the complimentary request, and, as it is supposed, about the close of 1671 his telescope was exhibited to the Royal Society. It was also submitted to the examination of the king. A description of it will be found in Phil. Trans., vol. vii., No. 81, p. 4004, March 25, 1672. It was undoubtedly inferior to the refracting telescopes of Hevelius and Huygens. More than half a century elapsed before telescopes of the Newtonian form "became useful in astronomy." The instrument of the inventor of the reflecting telescope—James Gregory—was also neglected. After a brief description of the gigantic telescope of the Earl of Rosse, Sir David Brewster, in order to give "a correct idea of its effective magnitude," enables us to compare it with other instruments by the following table, in which the specula are supposed to be square in place of round:

Names of Makers.	Diameter of Speculum.	Area of Surface.

"A TEN-FEET reflector," remarks Sir David, "will be due to science before the close of the century; and a disc of flint-glass, 29 inches in diameter, [executed by Messrs. Chance, Brothers and Company, of the Smethwick Glass-Works,] awaits the command of some liberal government or some munificent individual to be converted into an achromatic telescope of extraordinary power."—Life of Newton, i. 67.

On the 11th of January, 1672, Newton was rewarded for his ingenuity by an election to membership in the Royal Society, and, on the 18th of the same month, begged the secretary to inform him

"for what time the Society continued their weekly meetings; because," continued he, "if they continue them for any time, I am purposing them to be considered of and examined on account of a philosophical discovery which induced me to the making of the said telescope, and which I doubt not but will prove much more grateful than the communication of that instrument, being in my judgment the oddest if not the most considerable detection which hath hitherto been made in the operations of nature."

This discovery—the communication of which elicited "the solemn thanks" of the Society—was that of the different refrangibility of the rays of light, which Newton had explained to his class in his Lecture on Optics in the University of Cambridge, 1669, '70, and '71. An account of it will be found in Phil. Trans., No. 8, Feb. 19th, 1672

We have seen that it was in the autumn of 1665 that Newton's attention was first drawn to the subject of gravity. Some time in the next year he had arrived at the great truth "that the forces of the planets from the sun are reciprocally duplicate of their distances from him." After some experiments to test his theory that the same power by which an apple falls from a tree extends to the moon and retains her in her orbit, he "found such a discrepancy between the two forces that he abandoned the subject, suspecting that the power which retained the moon in her orbit might be partly that of gravity and partly that of the vortices of Descartes. This discrepancy arose from the adoption of an erroneous measure of the semi-diameter of the earth, of which the moon's distance was taken as a multiple."

The more accurate measurement of Picard, in 1670 afforded a surer basis for calculation; but Newton did not "resume his former thoughts concerning the moon" till 1684. On the 10th of December, 1684, Dr. Halley (who himself had anticipated the great discovery to which he was about to refer) informed the Royal Society "that he had lately seen Mr. Newton at Cambridge, who had showed him a curious treatise De Motu," which, at Dr. Halley's desire, he promised to send to the Society to be recorded. Newton made his communication before Feb. 23, 1685, and the treatise De Motu, (24 octavo pages,) the germ of the Principia, was registered in the Chronicles of the Society. It is now time that we had referred the reader, for detailed accounts of the discoveries of Newton, the controversies which they elicited and the results to which they led, to the work to which we have already acknowledged our obligations and intend still further to lay under contribution,—Sir David Brewster's Memoirs of the Life, Writings, and Discoveries of Sir Isaac Newton, 1855, 2 vols. 8vo,—and to the other authorities noticed hereafter. Brewster's Life of Newton was originally pub. as a vol. (xxiv.) of Murray's Family Library, 1831, 18mo. It had a wide circulation, and was warmly commended by the Edin. Rev., Oct. 1843; Lon. Month. Rev.; Athenæum; Literary Gazette; Spectator, (Sept. 10, 1831;) M. Herald, (Sept. 15, 1831;) and Asiatic Journal: see BREWSTER, SIR DAVID, LL.D. and K.H., p. 243, ante. Encouraged by the favourable reception of his little work, the learned author—one of the most illustrious pupils of his great master—felt justified in gratifying his enthusiasm in so noble a cause by collecting the materials for a more comprehensive and detailed account of the life, writings, and discoveries of a mortal so exalted above his race that, had he flourished in ancient Greece, he would —Dr. Johnson assures us—"have been worshipped as a divinity." Ready access was granted to the Newton MSS. in possession of the family of the Earl of Portsmouth, the descendant of Newton's niece,—the beautiful Catherine Barton. Baily's Life of Flamsteed, pub. in 1835; Rigaud's Historical Essay on the First Publication of Newton's Principia, 1838, 8vo; the (Macclesfield) Correspondence of Scientific Men of the Seventeenth Century, 1841, 2 vols. 8vo; the Correspondence of Sir Isaac Newton and Professor Cotes respecting the publication of the Second Edition of the Principia, edited by J. Edleston, 1850, 8vo; Professor De Morgan's Memoir of Newton, in Knight's Cabinet Historical Library, xi. 78–118, and other recent sources of information, were diligently investigated by Sir David, and in 1855 the results were given to the world in two handsome octavo vols., containing 1064 pages. It is but right to add that this work was very nearly, if not quite, ready for the press at least as early as 1843: the periodical which announced this fact and wondered at the delay in the publication of the work ventured the opinion that it will be

"every way worthy both of the illustrious subject of the narrative and of the distinguished reputation of the writer."—Edin. Rev., lxxviii. 402, Oct. 1843.

On the appearance of the anxiously-expected volumes, they were reviewed by the periodical which had thus heralded their advent. The critic joins issue with the biographer on a number of questions, and thus concludes his disquisitions:

"We have not gone into particular literary criticism of Sir D. Brewster's work. But our readers will see how far we have found reason to differ from the author in some points, while we freely admit that the literary and scientific world is deeply indebted to him for the disclosure of a large amount of new information relating to the illustrious subject of this memoir. But amid many highly-rhetorical passages and copious scientific illustrations of the history of Newton's discoveries, there is to our mind something of a one-sided and disagreeable tone pervading the whole performance: and as a composition we hardly think the work a memorial altogether worthy either of Newton or of Brewster."—April, 1856.

The London Times, also, (about July or August, 1855,) charges the biographer with undue exaltation of the character of his subject at the expense of the memories of Huygens, Hooke, Leibnitz, and Flamsteed, and with great carelessness in the arrangement of his biographical matter. In the preface to his work, p. xi., Sir David explains the cause of one noticeable instance of want of chronological sequence: new information respecting the history of the Principia was obtained after the printing of the first volume, where it would have appropriately been introduced, and therefore had to be thrown into volume second. The North British Review for August, 1855, devotes a few pages to the consideration of the work, and, whilst acknowledging the service his book has rendered to our literature, complains of the want of that even-handed justice which the critics just quoted also allege their inability to discover:

"Sir David Brewster," says the reviewer, "stands clear of the imputation of art by the mixture of all which art would avoid. A judicious barrister, when he has to admit some human nature in his client, puts an additional trump upon the trick by making some allowance for the other side; and nothing puts the other side in so perilous a predicament. It is not so with Sir D. Brewster. When sins against Newton are to be punished, we hear Juvenal; when Newton is to be reprimanded, we hear a nice and delicate Horace, who can

'In reverend bishops note small defects,
And own the Spaniard did a waggish thing
Who cropt our ears and sent them to the king.'"

Nor should we here omit to refer to M. Biot's justificatory papers in Journal des Savans, June, 1832, and May, 1834, of his assertion of Newton's mental derangement in his life of the philosopher in the Biographie Universelle, vol. xxxi., (in English, in the Library of Useful Knowledge.) This portion of M. Biot's biography had been specially objected to by Sir David in his Life of Newton, pub. in 1831; hence Biot's reaffirmation of his original position. That he entirely failed to satisfy Sir David of the soundness of his conclusions will be perceived by reference to Brewster's new Life of Newton, vol. ii. 140, 184–186, &c. Mr. Edleston (see Correspondence of Newton and Professor Cotes, pp. lx.–lxii.) entirely concurs in Brewster's view of this subject. Respecting the period during which, or in which, it is alleged by Biot (who first revived a story which dates back as far as 1693) that Newton's mind was under an eclipse, Sir David remarks,

"In reviewing the details which we have now given respecting the health and occupations of Newton from the beginning of 1692 to 1694, it is impossible to draw any other conclusion than that he possessed a sound mind, and was perfectly capable of carrying on his mathematical, his physical, and his theological inquiries. . . . Mr. Millington . . . assures Mr. Pepys 'that he is very well; that he fears he is under some small degree of melancholy, but that there is no reason to suspect that it hath at all touched his understanding.' . . . During this period of bodily indisposition, his mind, though in a state of nervous irritability and disturbed by want of rest, was capable of putting forth its highest powers."—Life of Newton, 1855, ii. 154–155.

We offer no opinion upon this painful theme, but refer it to the judgment of the intelligent reader.

We resume the story of Newton's life. In 1687 he pub. his Philosophiæ Naturalis Principia Mathematica, and in the same year was chosen one of the delegates to represent the University of Cambridge before the High Commission Court, to answer for their refusal to admit Father Francis Master of Arts upon the king's mandamus without his taking the oaths required by the statutes. He deported himself with the utmost courage, "and was not afraid of the king's commandment." In 1688 he was chosen by the University of Cambridge member of the Convention Parliament, and was again elected in 1701. In 1695, through the influence of his long-attached friend, Charles Montague, Earl of Halifax, who had become Chancellor of the Exchequer in the preceding year, Newton was made Warden of the Mint, with a salary of about £600; and in 1699 he succeeded to the mastership, worth from £1200 to £1500 per annum. In this year, also, he was elected one of the eight associate members of the Royal Academy of Sciences in Paris; in 1703 he was chosen President of the Royal Society, which dignified position he held, as he did also the mastership of the Mint, for the rest of his life; and in 1705 he was knighted by Queen Anne. With the Princess of Wales, afterwards Queen Caroline, consort to George II., he was an especial favourite; and his company was often requested at the palace, that her majesty might enjoy the pleasure of his conversation.

"George II. and Queen Caroline showed him particular marks of their favour and esteem, and often conversed with him for hours together. The queen, in particular, used to take delight in his company, and was accustomed to congratulate herself that she lived in the same country and at the same time with so illustrious a person."

The philosopher was never married. A writer in the Biographia Britannica, about a century ago, whom from his affected contempt for the pleasures of matrimonial life we suspect to have been a disappointed old bachelor, thus coolly dismisses this important theme:

"He never married, and perhaps he never had leisure to think of it. Being immersed in profound studies during the prime of his age, and afterwards engaged in an employment of great importance, and even quite taken up with the company which his merit drew to him, he was not sensible of any vacancy in life nor of the want of a companion at home."—Vol. v. 3242, 1760.

It is true that he entertained a great deal of company, partly drawn, as is observed above, by the "merit" of the great philosopher and partly by the rare beauty and brilliant conversational abilities of the famous Catherine Barton, the daughter of Sir Isaac's half-sister, and the granddaughter of the Rev. Barnabas Smith. After enjoying a most triumphant reign as a fashionable toast, this young lady accepted the hand of Mr. Conduitt, who succeeded his uncle-in-law to the mastership of the Mint. Their daughter, who married the eldest son of Lord Lymington, who inherited his father's title, was grandmother of the late Earl of Portsmouth. Notwithstanding Newton's generous style of living, his liberality to the poor, and his patronage of distressed men of letters, he left a personal estate of £32,000, which was divided among his four nephews and four nieces of the half blood, the grandchildren of his mother by the Rev. Mr. Smith. John Newton, the heir of the whole blood, whose great-grandfather was Sir Isaac Newton's uncle, inherited the land which Sir Isaac received from his own father and mother. He did no credit to his connexionship,—preferred the bottle to the telescope and the tavern to the observatory, and conferred the only benefit which he had in his power to render to his family and friends by an early departure (ætat. 30) from a world the responsibilities of which he neither understood nor attempted to execute. With him the family of Newton became extinct.

The death of this illustrious person, who had enjoyed the rare felicity of seeing two generations of his fellow-men reaping the fruits of his exalted genius, excited a profound sensation at home and abroad. His body lay in state in the Jerusalem Chamber, and was thence conveyed to Westminster Abbey, where it was buried near the entrance into the choir on the left hand. The pall was supported by the Lord High-Chancellor, the Dukes of Montrose and Roxburghe, and the Earls of Pembroke, Sussex, and Macclesfield, who were Fellows of the Royal Society. In Paris the most distinguished body of philosophers of whom the world could boast were called together to hear a eulogy from Fontenelle on the services of the chosen interpreter who had thus in the maturity of age been permitted to draw nearer to the awful Source of those Laws of Nature which he had so long and so successfully expounded for the instruction of mankind. The orator was warmed by his theme and his auditory; and, anxious to illustrate by his eloquence the splendid discoveries of Newton's early manhood, he passed over his juvenile years with the happy comment that "one may apply to Newton what Lucan says of the Nile,—that it has not been permitted to mortals to see that river in a feeble state." Mr. Conduitt supplied Fontenelle with a Memoir of Newton, (since pub. by Mr. Turnor in his Collections for the History of the Town and Soke of Grantham,) and, among other instructions, begged him

"not to omit to mention that Queen Caroline used to delight much in the conversation of Newton; and nothing could do more honour to Newton than the commendation of a queen the Minerva of her age."

"Fontenelle," remarks Professor Playfair, "was too much a philosopher and a man of the world, and had himself approached too near to the persons of princes, to be of Mr. Conduitt's opinion, or to think that the approbation of the most illustrious princess could add dignity to the man who had made the three greatest discoveries yet known, and in whose hands the sciences of Geometry, Optics, and Astronomy had all taken new forms. If he had been called to write the Eloge of the Queen of England, he would, no doubt, have remarked her relish for the conversation of Newton." —Third Prelim. Dissert. to Encyc. Brit., 7th ed., 553.

This is well turned; and we like the esprit du corps it evinces. The honours elicited by his genius and virtues seem to have less elated their object than the good Mr. Conduitt. Fontenelle doubtless took a philosopher's pride in declaring that Newton "was not distinguished from other men by any singularity, either natural or affected;" and Dr. Johnson considered it "as an eminent instance of his superiority to the rest of mankind that he was able to separate knowledge from those weaknesses by which knowledge is generally disgraced; that he was able to excel in science and wisdom without purchasing them by the neglect of little things: and that he stood alone merely because he had left the rest of mankind behind him, not because he deviated from the beaten track."

According to Bishop Atterbury's testimony, there does not appear to have been any thing more remarkable in his appearance than in his manners:

"The œil fort vif et fort perçant which Fontenelle gives him," remarks his lordship, "did not belong to him,—at least, for twenty years past, about which time I first became acquainted with him. Indeed, in the whole air of his face and make there was nothing of that penetrating sagacity which appears in his composures. He had something rather languid in his look and manner, which did not raise any great expectation in those who did not know him."—Atterbury's Correspondence, vol. ii. p. 329.

"He was blessed," we are told, "with a very happy and vigorous constitution: he was of a middle stature, and rather plump in his latter years: he had . . . a comely and gracious aspect, and a fine head of hair, as white as silver, without any baldness. To the time of his last illness he had the bloom and colour of a young man. He never wore spectacles, nor lost more than one tooth till the day of his death, [in his 85th year.] . . . He retained all his senses and faculties to the end of his life, strong, vigorous, and lively. He continued writing and studying many hours every day till the period of his last illness."

"The book which was commonly lying before him, and which he read oftenest at last," says Mr. Conduitt, "was a duodecimo Bible."

In our life of Sir William Jones (p. 993, ante) we have quoted Sir Isaac Newton's testimony to the authenticity of the volume which he so highly valued. It will be seen that he was anxious that others should share in the studies which experience had proved to be pleasant and profitable to himself:

"We have been the dispensers," writes the Rev. Nicolas Wilkins, about ten months after Sir Isaac's death, "of many dozens of Bibles sent by him for poor people: and I have now many by me sent from him for the same purpose, which, as it shows the great regard he had for religion, I cannot but desire that by you it may be made public to the world. Dear sir, my thoughts dwell with wonderful delight upon the memory of this great and good man," &c.—Letter to Mr. Professor Smith, at Trinity College, Cambridge, Jan. 16th, 1727–28.

"This," says Dr. Pemberton, "I immediately discovered in him, which at once both surprised and charmed me:—neither his extreme great age nor his universal reputation had rendered him stiff in opinion, or in any degree elated."

"Sir Isaac Newton, a little before he died, said, 'I don't know what I may seem to the world; but, as to myself, I seem to have been only like a boy playing on the sea-shore and diverting myself in now and then finding a smoother pebble or a prettier shell than ordinary, whilst the great ocean of truth lay all undiscovered before me.'"—R[amsay]. Spence's Anecdotes, ed. 1820, 54.

"Mr. Percival, his tenant, who still lives there, [in the house where Newton was born,] says he [Newton] was a man of very few words; that he would sometimes be silent and thoughtful for above a quarter of an hour together, and look all the while almost as if he was saying his prayers: but that when he did speak it was always very much to the purpose."—May 14, 1755, SPENCE: ubi supra, 362.

"This reserve no doubt was at some of these times the genuine effect of his native modesty, which (in passing to contemplate the character of his mind) appears to stand foremost in his composition, and was, in truth, greater than can easily be imagined or will be readily believed; yet it always continued so without any alteration, though the whole world says M. de Fontenelle [in his Éloge] conspired against it. . . . He never talked either of himself or others, nor ever behaved in such a manner as to give the most malicious censurers the least occasion ever to suspect him of vanity. He was candid and affable, and always put himself upon a level with his company. He never thought either his merit or his reputation sufficient to excuse him from any of the common offices of social life. No singularities, either natural or affected, distinguished him from other men."—Biog. Brit., v. 3141–3142, 1760.

Dr. Humphrey Newton, his assistant and amanuensis for nearly five years, from the end of 1683 to '89, tells us that "His carriage was very meek, sedate, and humble, never seemingly angry, of profound thought, his countenance mild, pleasant, and comely. I cannot say I ever saw him laugh but once. . . . He very rarely went to bed till two or three of the clock, sometimes not till five or six, lying about four or five hours. [He afterwards learned to retire at twelve.] . . . He never slept in ye daytime, yt I ever perceived. I believe he grudged ye short time he spent in eating and sleeping. . . . Ofttimes he has forgot to eat at all, so that, going into his chamber, I have found his mess untouched, of which when I have reminded him, he would reply, 'Have I?' and then, making to the table, would eat a bit or two standing, for I cannot say I ever saw him sit at table by himself. Ye old woman his bed-maker in a morning has sometimes found both dinner and supper scarcely tasted of, weh ye old woman has very pleasantly and mumpingly gone away with. . . . He very rarely went to dine in the hall, except on some public days, and then, if he has not been minded, would go very carelessly with shoes down at heels, stockings untied, surplice on, and his head scarcely combed."—Letters to Mr. Conduitt, Jan. $17\frac{2}{3}\frac{7}{7}$; Feb. $14\frac{2}{3}\frac{7}{8}$.

"Dr. Stukely one day by appointment paid a visit to Sir Isaac Newton. The servant said he was in his study, and no one was permitted to disturb him there; but, as it was near his dinner-time, the visitor sat down to wait for him. In a short time a boiled chicken under cover was brought in for dinner. An hour passed, and Sir Isaac did not appear. The doctor then ate the fowl and covered up the empty dish, and desired the servant to get another dressed for his master. Before that was ready the great man came down: he apologized for his delay, and added, 'Give me but leave to take my short dinner, and I shall be at your service: I am fatigued and faint.' Saying this, he lifted up the cover, and without any emotion turned about to Stukely with a smile. 'See,' he said, 'what we studious people are: I forgot that I had dined!'"

Dr. Stukely says that

"When he had friends to entertain, if he went into his study to fetch a bottle of wine, there was danger of his forgetting them. He would sometimes put on his surplice to go to St. Mary's Church. . . . Going home to Colsterworth from Grantham, he once led his horse up Spittelgate Hill, at the town end. When he designed to remount, his horse had slipped the bridle and gone away without his perceiving it; and he had only the bridle in his hand all the way."—Letter to Conduitt.

"Absorbed in thought, he would often sit down on his bedside after he rose, and remain there for hours without dressing himself, occupied with some interesting investigation which had fixed his attention."

"Newton formerly would go the length of a street before he came to himself and saw that he was not dressed, and therefore had to hasten back to his house quite ashamed."—KRAUSEN: Umständliche Bücher Historie, Part 1, p. 2, Leipsic, 1715.

"I have heard my father often say that he has been a witness of what the world has so often heard of,—Sir Isaac's forgetfulness of his food when intent upon his studies, and of his rising in a pleasant manner with the satisfaction of having found out some proposition, without any concern for a seeming want of his night's sleep, which he was sensible he had lost thereby."—NIC. WILKINS: Letter to Prof. Smith, Jan. 16th, 1727-28.

With such testimony, the query of the distinguished Frenchman might certainly have been answered in the negative:

"Does Newton eat, or drink, or sleep like other men? [says the Marquis de l'Hôpital, one of the greatest mathematicians of the age, to the English who visited him.] I represent him to myself as a celestial genius, entirely disengaged from matter."—Pref. to Des Maizeaux's Recueil, &c., 1720.

On a preceding page (1106) we have had occasion to notice the journey of Dr. Martin Lister to Paris in the year 1698, about thirty years before Newton's decease. The good doctor, in the course of his rounds among the great men, did not forget the celebrated mathematician whose remarks we have just quoted:

"The Marquis de l'Hôpital, . . . whom I found not at home, returned my visit very obligingly. I had a long conversation with him about philosophy and learning. . . . Nothing was more pleasing to him than to hear of Mr. Newton's preferment [to the wardenship of the Mint] and that there were hopes that they might expect something more from him."

But the Rev. Dr. Samuel Crell, an eminent German divine, was more highly favoured than the marquis; for in 1726 he was in London and paid his respects to the English philosopher, now in his 84th year. He writes to his friend Lacroze, 17th July, 1727,

"I also conversed at different times with the illustrious Newton, who died in the month of March at the age of eighty-five. He read manuscript without spectacles, and without bringing it near his eyes. He still reasoned acutely as he was wont to do, and told me that his memory only had failed him. . . . He was not only deeply versed in mathematics and philosophy, but likewise in theology and ecclesiastical history."

His niece, Catherine Barton, (Mrs. Conduitt,) tells us—greatly to the philosopher's credit—that he "could not bear to hear any one talk ludicrously of religion. . . . Upon Vigani's (with whom he was very intimate, and took great pleasure in discoursing with him on chemistry) telling him a loose story about a nun, he broke off all acquaintance with him."

When Dr. Halley would venture a remark apparently disrespectful to religion, Newton would check him with the reproof, "I have studied these things: you have not." The Rev. S. J. Rigaud pub. in 1844 a Defence of Halley against the Charge of Religious Infidelity; and Professor Rigaud, the author's father, coincided in this favourable opinion of Halley. Sir David Brewster seems to take the same charitable view. The indifference to appearances which the philosopher exhibited when absorbed in his scientific investigations sometimes led to amusing mistakes,—e. g.:

"When Sir Isaac Newton changed his residence and went to live in Leicester Place, his next-door neighbour was a widow lady, who was much puzzled by the little she had observed of the philosopher. One of the Fellows of the Royal Society of London called upon her one day, when, among other domestic news, she mentioned that some one had come to reside in the adjoining house who she felt certain was a poor crazy gentleman, 'because,' she continued, 'he diverts himself in the oddest ways imaginable. Every morning, when the sun shines so brightly that we are obliged to draw the window-blinds, he takes his seat in front of a tub of soap-suds, and occupies himself for hours blowing soap-bubbles through a common clay pipe, and intently watches them till they burst. He is doubtless now at his favourite amusement,' she added: 'do come and look at him.' The gentleman smiled, and then went up-stairs, when, after looking through the window into the adjoining yard, he turned round and said, 'My dear madam, the person whom you suppose to be a poor lunatic is no other than the great Sir Isaac Newton, studying the refraction of light upon thin plates,—a phenomenon which is beautifully exhibited upon the surface of a common soap-bubble.'"

Bishop Horsley's Complete Edition of the Works of Sir Isaac Newton, 1779-85, 5 vols. 4to, has been noticed on a preceding page, (HORSLEY, SAMUEL, LL.D., No. 5;) but it will be proper in this place to refer to his principal publications and cite some opinions upon their merits. "The object was to enable persons having little mathematical knowledge, beyond elementary geometry and algebra, to follow the demonstrations of the fundamental propositions and to understand by what kind of reasoning the others are proved. That it was successful in this respect there were undoubted proofs; but the discussions with which the investigations were interspersed had also a very material effect."—LORD BROUGHAM: Lives of Philos. of the Time of George III., ed. 1855, Pref., xii., n. (Notice of ed. of 1839.)

"The most complete and successful attempt to make the Principia accessible to those who are 'little skilled in mathematical studies' has been made by Lord Brougham, in his admirable analysis of that work which forms the greater part of the second volume of his edition of Paley's Natural Theology."—SIR DAVID BREWSTER: Life of Newton, 1855, i. 470.

"The able analysis and commentary recently published by Lord Brougham and Mr. Routh places Newton's immortal work, in a most convenient form, within the reach of the modern student."—Edin. Rev., April, 1855: Sir Isaac Newton. (Notice of Brewster's Life of Newton, ed. 1855.)

It is to be regretted that such an aid was not vouchsafed to the generation which hailed the birth of the Principia; for Humphrey Newton tells us,

"After the printing, Sir Isaac was pleased to send me with several of them in presents to some of the heads of colleges, and others of his acquaintance, some of whom (particularly Dr. Babington, of Trinity) said that they might study seven years before they understood any thing of it."

It would be easy to quote many testimonies to the wonderful intellectual ability displayed in the Principia, but it would be very difficult to match the modest estimate which the author himself placed upon his production:

"When I wrote my treatise about our system," (in the Third Book of the Principia,) he wrote to Dr. Bentley in 1692, "I had an eye upon such principles as might work with considering men for the belief of a Deity; and nothing can rejoyce me more than to find it useful for that purpose. But, if I have done the public any service this way, it is due to nothing but industry and patient thought."—Four Letters to Dr. Bentley, 1756, 8vo.

This humility is in entire keeping with the character of the author; but other philosophers speak in a very different strain:

"It may be justly said that so many and so valuable philosophical truths as are herein discovered and put past dispute were never yet owing to the capacity and industry of any one man."—EDMUND HALLEY: Phil. Trans., vol. xvi. p. 296.

"The importance and generality of the discoveries, and the immense number of original and profound views which have been the germ of the most brilliant theories of the philosophers of this century, and all presented with much elegance, will ensure to the work on the Mathematical Principles of Natural Philosophy a pre-eminence above all the other productions of human genius."—LAPLACE: Système du Monde. édit. 2de, 1799. 336.

"Il y a déjà plusieurs années que cet excellent ouvrage est admiré dans toute l'Europe, et principalement en France, où l'on sait bien connaître le mérite étranger. Mais présentement, monsieur, que vous avez une place dans notre Académie, nous prétendons, en quelque façon, que vous n'êtes plus étranger pour nous, et nos Savants qui ont quelque droit de vous appeler leur Confrère prennent une part plus particulière à votre gloire. On peut sans témerité vous prédire qu'elle sera immortelle par les deux livres que vous avez publiés, où il brille de toutes parts un si heureux génie de découvertes, et où ceux-même qui savent le plus trouvent tant à apprendre."—FONTENELLE: à Paris ce 4 Fév. 1714, *Sec. "The celebrated Lagrange," says Sir David Brewster, "who frequently asserted that Newton was the greatest genius that ever existed, used to add—and the most fortunate: for we cannot find more than once a system of the world to establish."

"It is chiefly, too, since the time of Newton that the ontology and pneumatology of the dark ages have been abandoned for inquiries resting on the solid bases of experience and analogy, and that philosophers have felt themselves emboldened, by his astonishing discoveries concerning the more distant parts of the material universe, to argue from the known to the unknown parts of the moral world."—Dugald Stewart: First Prelim. Dissert. to Encyc. Brit., 7th ed.. 140.

"The reader of the Principia, if he be a tolerably-good mathematician, can follow the whole chain of demonstration by which the universality of gravitation is deduced from the fact that it is a power acting inversely as the square of the distance to the centre of attraction. Satisfying himself of the laws which regulate the motion of bodies in trajectories around given centres, he can convince himself of the sublime truths unfolded in that immortal work," &c.—Lord Brougham: Disserts. on Subjects connected with Natural Theology, 1839, ii. 243–280.

"No one for sixty years after the publication of the Principia—and, with Newton's methods, no one up to the present day—has added any thing of any value to his deductions. We know that he calculated all the principal lunar inequalities: in many of the cases he has given us his processes, in others only his results. But who has presented in his beautiful geometry, or deduced from his simple principles, any of the inequalities which he left untouched? The ponderous instrument of synthesis, so effective in his hand, has never since been grasped by one who could use it for such purposes; and we gaze at it with admiring curiosity, as on some gigantic implement of war which stands idle among the memorials of ancient days and makes us wonder what manner of man he was who could wield as a weapon what we can hardly handle as a burden."—Dr. Whewell.

"The Theory of the Moon, which crowns his immortal Principia, is a production of genius, sagacity, and invention almost superhuman. He ascends with admirable order from the easier to the more difficult problems, reducing them always to greater simplicity; he pursues his approximations with consummate address, and, seldom passing the clear bounds of geometry or entangling his demonstrations in the labyrinth of algebraical formulæ, he advances with elegance and apparently without effort to the disclosure of the most recondite truths."—Sir John Leslie: Fourth Dissert. to Encyc. Brit., 7th ed., 663.

Perhaps Sir David Brewster's most eloquent passage is that in which he celebrates the exceeding glory of the Principia:

"A work," says he, "which will be memorable not only in the annals of one science or of one country, but which will form an epoch in the history of the world, and will ever be regarded as the brightest page in the records of human reason,—a work (may we not add?) which would be read with delight in every planet of our system,—in every system of the universe. What a glorious privilege was it to have been the author of the Principia! There was but one earth upon whose form and tides and movements the philosopher could exercise his genius,—one moon whose perturbations and inequalities and actions he could study,—one sun whose controlling force and apparent motions he could calculate and determine,—one system of planets whose mutual disturbances could tax his highest reason,—one system of comets whose eccentric paths he could explore and rectify,—and one universe of stars to whose binary and multiple combinations he could extend the law of terrestrial gravity. To have been the chosen sage summoned to the study of that earth, these systems, and that universe—the favoured lawgiver to worlds unnumbered, the high-priest in the temple of boundless space—was a privilege that could be granted but to one member of the human family; and to have executed the task was an achievement which in its magnitude can be measured only by the infinite in time. That Sage, that Lawgiver, that High-Priest, was Newton."—Life of Newton, 1855, i. 318–319. See also iii. 106, 250, ii. 398.

Professor Playfair truly remarks that,

"When one considers the splendour of Newton's discoveries, the beauty, the simplicity and grandeur of the system they unfolded, and the demonstrative evidence by which that system was supported, one could hardly doubt that to be received it required only to be made known, and that the establishment of the Newtonian philosophy all over Europe would very quickly have followed the publication of it. In drawing this conclusion, however, we should make too small an allowance for the influence of received opinion, and the resistance that mere habit is able for a time to oppose to the strongest evidence. The Cartesian system of vortices had many followers in all the countries of Europe, and particularly in France. . . . For more than thirty years after the publication of those discoveries the system of vortices kept its ground."—Dissert. Third to Encyc. Brit., 7th ed., 566.

Even Fontenelle, when he delivered the eloquent Éloge à Newton from which we have quoted on a preceding page, remained a Cartesian; and the Chancellor D'Aguesseau refused to license the publication of Voltaire's work because it disproved the vortices. Cassini and Maraldi, and Huygens, were also among the opponents of the new philosophy. As regards its introduction at home, Newton, Whiston, and Saunderson taught it at Cambridge; Keill at Oxford; and James and David Gregory opened to its entrance the doors of the Universities of St. Andrew's and Edinburgh. It is not to be supposed, however, that so great a revolution in philosophy was effected without a struggle. See Playfair's Prelim. Dissert., 566–567; Brewster's Life of Newton, 1855, i. 330–342.

The ingenious manner in which Dr. Samuel Clarke aided the progress of the Newtonian principles at Cambridge we have already explained in our life (p. 391, ante) of that eminent philosopher. The triumph of Newton was indeed great.

"No one," says Professor Playfair, "ever left knowledge in a state so different from that in which he found it. Men were instructed not only in new truths, but in new methods of discovering old truth: they were made acquainted with the great principle which connects together the most distant regions of space as well as the most remote periods of duration, and which was to lead to further discoveries far beyond what the wisest or most sanguine could anticipate."—Prelim. Dissert., 572,—where read Playfair's comparison between the respective merits of Leibnitz and Newton.

These great names can hardly be coupled without recalling the long-vexed question as to priority in the invention of fluxions. We can do nothing more to the purpose than quote the results of Sir David Brewster's elaborate investigations into this knotty subject:

"The following are the results to which we have arrived:

"1. That Newton was the first inventor of the Method of Fluxions; that the method was incomplete in its notation; and that the fundamental principle of it was not published to the world till 1687,—twenty years after he had invented it.

"2. That Leibnitz communicated to Newton, in 1677, his Differential Calculus, with a complete system of notation, and that he published it in 1684,—three years before the publication of Newton's method.

"The admission of these two facts ought to satisfy the most ardent friends of the rival inventors."—Life of Newton, 1855, ii. 78.

If the investigation had resulted less favourably to Newton's claims, he could well afford the loss; for his contemporary, Professor Keill, assures us

"that, if all philosophy and mathematics were considered as consisting of ten parts, nine of them would be found to be improved by his invention."

In the comparison between Newton and Leibnitz, Professor Playfair remarks that

"Newton to equal inventions in mathematics added the greatest discoveries in the philosophy of nature; and, in passing through his hands, Mechanics, Optics, and Astronomy were not merely improved, but renovated."—Prelim. Dissert., 572.

In an eloquent review of the characteristics and achievements of the great minds which ruled the republic of letters and the domain of science towards the close of the reign of Charles II., Lord Macaulay remarks,

"But the glory of these men, eminent as they were, is cast into the shade by the transcendent lustre of one immortal name. In Isaac Newton two kinds of intellectual power—which have little in common and which are not often found together in a very high degree of vigour, but which, nevertheless, are equally necessary in the most sublime departments of natural philosophy—were united as they have never been united before or since. There may have been minds as happily constituted as his for the cultivation of pure mathematical science; there may have been minds as happily constituted for the cultivation of science purely experimental: but in no other mind have the demonstrative faculty and the inductive faculty coexisted in such supreme excellence and perfect harmony. Perhaps in an age of Scotists and Thomists even his intellect might have run to waste, as many intellects ran to waste which were inferior only to his. Happily, the spirit of the age in which his lot was cast gave the right direction to his mind, and his mind reacted with tenfold force on the spirit of the age. In the year 1685, his fame, though splendid, was only dawning; but his genius was in the meridian. His great work—that work which effected a revolution in the most important provinces of natural philosophy—had been completed, [it was completed in May, 1686,] but was not yet published, [in midsummer, 1687,] and was just about to be submitted to the consideration of the Royal Society [submitted May, 1686]."—Hist. of England, vol. i., 1849, chap. iii.

Our article has already transcended its intended limits, and we have but little more room for comment upon the other works, of which we shall give the titles.

2. Optics; or, A Treatise of the Reflections, Refractions, Inflections, and Colours of Light, Lon., 1704, 4to: in English. To this ed. two Latin treatises were appended,—viz.: I. De Quadratura Curvarum, [on Fluxions;] II. Enumeratio Linearum tertii Ordinis. Optics, in Latin, trans. by Dr. Clarke, 1706, 4to; 1719, 8vo; 1721, 8vo; 1728, 8vo: in English, 1714, '21, '30; in Latin, Lausanne, 1740; Padua, 1733; in French, trans. by Peter Coste, Paris, 1722, 4to; Amst., 1729, 2 vols. 12mo; trans. by Marat, Paris, 1787, 2 vols.

"One of the noblest efforts of human intellect."—Sir John Leslie.

"The third [and last] book of the Optics concludes with those celebrated Queries which carry the mind so far beyond the bounds of ordinary speculation, though still with the support and under the direction of either direct experiment or close analogy. . . . Such enlarged and comprehensive views, so many bold and new conceptions, were never before combined with the sobriety and caution of philosophical induction."—PROF. PLAYFAIR: Dissert. Third to Encyc. Brit., 553.

The two Latin treatises (on Fluxions) were pub. in Latin, edit. Will. Jones, Lon., 1711, 4to, and in English by John Colson, with a Commentary, 1736, 4to.

3. Arithmetica Universalis, seu de Compositione et Resolutione Arithmetica Liber, Cantab., 1707, 8vo. Printed under the inspection of Whiston, without the author's sanction. Among the edits. to be noticed are the Latin one, with a Comment. by Castillian, Amst., 1761, 2 vols. 4to, and an English one by Raphson, Lon., 1728, 8vo; by Theaker Wilder, D.D., 1769, 2 vols. 8vo. 4. Analysis per Equationes Numero Terminorum Infinitas, Lon., 1711, 4to; trans. by Stewart, 1745, 4to. 5. De Mundi Systemata, 1728, 4to. This is a popular account of truths in the Third Book of the Principia. Other edits. 6. The Chronology of Ancient Kingdoms Amended [surreptitiously pub. in French at], Paris, 1725, 4to: in English, Lon., 1728, 4to; Dubl., 1728, 4to; 1728, 8vo; Lon., 1770, 4to. See Brewster's Life of Newton, ii. 301–312.

"Sir Isaac Newton told Bishop Pearce that he had spent thirty years at intervals in reading over all the authors, or parts of authors, which could furnish him with materials for his 'Chronology of Ancient Kingdoms,' and that he had written that work sixteen times with his own hand."

But see Biog. Brit., v., (1760,) 3243, (Whiston's remarks.) 7. Optical Lectures, [comprising those delivered in 1669–70–71,] 1728, 4to: in Latin, 1729, 4to. 8. Observations on the Prophecies of Daniel and the Apocalypse of St. John, Dubl., 1733, 4to: in Latin, by M. Sudemann, Amst., 1737, 4to; new ed., in English, by Borthwick, Lon., 1831, 8vo. This work is supposed to have been composed before 1693, or not later than that date. It contains fourteen sections on Daniel and three on the Apocalypse. Dr. Zachary Grey pub. An Examination of the Fourteenth Chapter of Sir Isaac Newton's Observations on Daniel, 1736, 8vo.

"If Sir Isaac Newton had not been distinguished as a mathematician and a natural philosopher, he would have enjoyed a high reputation as a theologian. . . . When Voltaire asserted that Sir Isaac explained the Prophecies in the same manner as those who went before him, he only exhibited his ignorance of what Newton wrote and of what others had written; and when he stated that Newton composed his Commentaries on the Apocalypse to console mankind for the great superiority which he had over them, he but showed the emptiness of the consolation to which scepticism aspires. . . . England may well be proud of having had Napier, and Milton, and Locke, and Newton for the champions both of its faith and its Protestantism."—SIR DAVID BREWSTER: Life of Newton, 1855, ii. 313, 355.

"This I know, that he was much more solicitous in his inquiries into religion than into natural philosophy, and that the reason of his showing the errors of Cartes' philosophy was because he thought it was made on purpose to be the foundation of infidelity. . . . It is hoped that the worthy and ingenious Mr. Conduitt will take care that they [his theological writings] be published; that the world may see that Sir Isaac Newton was as good a Christian as he was a mathematician and philosopher."—JOHN CRAIG, the mathematician, (Newton's friend): Letter to Mr. Conduitt, 7th April, 1727.

Of the Observations, Mr. Orme remarks,

"It reflects no discredit on his talents or sagacity to say that his fame depends on his philosophical discoveries, not on his exposition of prophecy."—Bibl. Bib., 329.

Another critic of at least equal eminence remarks,

"All subsequent commentators are largely indebted to the labours of Sir Isaac Newton."—Horne's Bibl. Bib., 291.

This may remind the reader of Sir Isaac's own words in this work:

"If I have done any thing which may be useful to following writers, I have my design. The folly of interpreters has been to foretell times and things by this Prophecy, as if God designed to make them prophets. By this rashness they have not only exposed themselves, but brought the Prophecy also into contempt.

"The design of God when he gave them this and other prophecies of the Old Testament was not to gratify men's curiosity by enabling them to foreknow things, but to the end that after they were fulfilled they might be interpreted by the event, and his own providence, not the wisdom and skill of the interpreters, be thus manifested thereby to the world."

Bishop Hurd also well remarks in the same spirit that

"the declared end of prophecy is not that we may be enabled by it to foresee things before they come to pass, but that when they come to pass we may acknowledge the divine Author of the prophecy."—Serm. VII.

"Even the prophecies of Christ could not give full conviction till the time of their accomplishment had arrived."—Ibid., Serm. V.

Dr. E. Williams remarks that Sir Isaac's Observations on the Apocalypse

"is not an exposition so much as hints. . . . The Observations on Daniel contain some very valuable hints."—Christian Preacher, 290, 294.

"There is scarce a prophecy in the Old Testament concerning Christ which doth not, in something or other, relate to his second coming."—SIR ISAAC NEWTON.

9. Two Letters to Mr. Le Clerc on the Reading of the Greek Text 1 John v. 7, and on 1 Timothy iii. 16, 1754, 8vo. Very imperfect. It was reprinted entire in vol. v. of Bp. Horsley's collective ed. of Newton's Works, under the title of An Historical Account of two Notable Corruptions of Scripture, in a Letter to a Friend; and reprinted, 1830, 8vo, and 1841, 8vo. A portion of the work was commented on by Rev. E. Henderson, D.D., in The Great Mystery of Godliness Incontrovertible; or, Sir I. Newton and the Socinians Foiled in the Attempt to prove a Corruption in the Text 1 Tim. iii. 16, 1830, 8vo. See HENDERSON, EBENEZER, D.D., No. 6. Sir Isaac Newton's treatise was written before 1691. See an account of it in Brewster's Life of Newton, ed. 1831, 274; ed. 1855, ii. 323–327, 331–339, 523–525. Sir Isaac Newton gave this treatise to John Locke (who sent it to Le Clerc) to be pub. in Holland, but afterwards altered his intention and suppressed it; nor was it pub. until 1754 from the MS. sent to Le Clerc. See Tracts on the Divinity of Christ, by Bishop Burgess, 1820, xc. 371, 372; and his Introduction to the Controversy on the Disputed Verse in St. John, Salisbury, 1835, &c.; a Reply to Bp. M. Biot remarks of the Historical Account that "an erudition the most vast, the most varied, and the most ready always supports an argument well arranged and powerfully combined."—Life of Newton.

Mr. Orme says that

"These letters contain a considerable display of learning in opposition to the received readings of these important texts."

It is well known to Biblical critics that the weight of authority is decidedly against the authenticity of 1 John v. 7. Wetstein, Griesbach, Gibbon, and especially Porson in his Letters to Archdeacon Travis, combat its defenders with great vigour. Sir Charles Lyell goes so far as to say that by Porson's Letters the "question was forever set at rest." (Second Visit to the United States, i. 122.) Bishop Burgess, notwithstanding all opposition, resolutely maintained its right to a place in the sacred canon. Sir David Brewster remarks,

"As the tendency of the Historical Account, &c. was to deprive the defenders of the doctrine of the Trinity of the aid of two leading texts. Sir Isaac Newton has been regarded by the Socinians and Arians, and even by some orthodox divines, as an antitrinitarian: but this opinion is not warranted by any thing which he has published."—Life of Newton, 1855, ii. 337.

M. Biot also says,

"There is absolutely nothing in the writings of Newton which can justify, or even authorize, the conjecture that he was an antitrinitarian."—Biog. Univ., xxxi. 190.

Sir David Brewster also remarks,

"I had no hesitation, when writing the Life of Sir Isaac Newton in 1830, in coming to the conclusion that he was a believer in the Trinity," &c.—Life of Newton, 1858, ii. 340.

But in 1836 Sir David Brewster found among the papers of Sir Isaac, at Hurtsbourne Park, a number of theological MSS. (some of which he has since given to the world in his Life of Newton, 1855,) bearing on the Athanasian controversy, &c. Among the most remarkable of these are 22 Quæries regarding the word ὁμοούσιος. See Brewster's Life of Newton, 1855, ii. 341–355, and Appendix, xxix., xxx. 526–534. It would appear, from Sir David's remarks in the Preface (p. xv.) of his new Life of Newton, that the perusal of these papers had altered the biographer's estimate of the theological opinions of Sir Isaac. We conceive that we can do nothing fairer in the premises than to submit the whole question to the careful consideration of the reader:

"That the greatest philosopher of which any age can boast," remarks Sir David, "was a sincere and humble believer in the leading doctrines of our religion and lived conformably to its precepts, has been justly regarded as a proud triumph of the Christian faith. . . . If such be the character of Christian truth, we need not be surprised that it was embraced and expounded by such a genius as Sir Isaac Newton. Cherishing its doctrines and leaning on its promises, he felt it his duty, as it was his delight, to apply to it that intellectual strength which had successfully surmounted the difficulties of the material universe. . . . He added to the cloud of witnesses the brightest name of ancient or of modern times.

> 'What wonder, then, that his devotion swelled
> Responsive to his knowledge! for could he > Whose piercing mental eye diffusive saw
> The finished university of things,
> In all its order, magnitude, and parts,
> Forbear incessant to adore that Power
> Who fills, sustains, and actuates the whole?'
> THOMSON."

Life of Newton, 1855, ii. 314, 359.

"Shakspeare, Milton, Locke, and Newton are four names beyond competition superior to any that the Continent can put against them."—SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH.

"Nature and Nature's laws lay hid in night:
God said, 'Let Newton be!' and all was light."
Pope's Inscription in the room where Newton was born."

"The house in which Sir Isaac Newton was born, at Woolsthorpe, near Grantham, is about to be pulled down, and it is understood that a scientific establishment is to be erected on the site."—May, 1858.

Newton, John. Serm., Lon., 1684, 4to.

Newton, John, 1725–1807, a native of London, went to sea at the age of eleven, and was subsequently engaged in the slave-trade; was ordained, in 1764, to the curacy of Olney, Buckinghamshire, which he held for sixteen years; presented by John Thornton, Esq., to the living of the united parishes of St. Mary Woolnoth and St. Mary Woolchurch Haw, Lombard Street, where he resided until his death. He was a man of exemplary piety and untiring zeal. A collective ed. of his works, with a Life by the Rev. Richard Cecil, was pub. Lon., 1816, 6 vols. 8vo; 1821, 6 vols. 8vo; 1824, 6 vols. 8vo; also 1821, 12 vols. 12mo; in 4 vols. 8vo; and (with Introduc. by Rev. F. Cunningham) 1 vol. imp. 8vo, 1828, '36, '37, '38. Some of his works have been pub. separately, some more than once. 1. Letters to a Wife, 12mo. 2. Letters to Rev. W. Burlas, 12mo. 3. Letters (68) to Rev. W. Bull, 1773–1805; 5th ed., 1856, 12mo. 4. Omicron Letters; new ed., 1838, 8vo. 5. XXV. Letters, 1840, 18mo. 6. Apologia; new ed., 1842, 12mo. 7. Cardiphonia; several eds.; one with Essay by David Russell, D.D., 12mo. 8. Aged Pilgrim's Triumph, 12mo. 9. Review of Ecclesiastical History; new ed., 12mo; first pub. 1770, 8vo.

"Truly valuable; and it will be difficult to find one which can equally claim the appellative of a Christian Church History."—Bogue.

10. XVI. Serms., 12mo. 11. Posthumous Works, 2 vols. 12mo, and also in 1 vol. 8vo. 12. Autobiography and Continuation by Cecil, 1855, 12mo: see Cecil, Richard. 13. Life, 1855, 12mo. Newton pub. a Life of Grimshaw, 1799, 12mo, (see Grimshaw, William, 1708–1763,) and assisted in the composition and selection of the Olney Hymns. See Cowper, William; Montgomery, James.

"Newton's works are very familiar, experimental, holy, and edifying. . . . His conversion was remarkable; and his works manifest that rich Christian experience which such a course as his, under the Divine Spirit, was adapted to give. His letters show great knowledge of the heart and furnish excellent lessons of Christian wisdom."—Bickersteth's C. S., 1844, 321, 444.

The Rev. F. Cunningham, recommending Newton's Works (1 vol. imp. 8vo) to the careful perusal of all classes, remarks that "to the young it shows the evil and the shame attendant upon a sinful course. To the penitent it points out the remission of sin through faith in the sacrifice and righteousness of Christ. To the established Christian it will be found to abound in edification and encouragement. To all it will teach the power of the grace of God in subduing and turning the heart."

He was one of the best Latin poets of his age. See Athen. Oxon.; Brydges's Phillips's Theat. Poet.; Lysons's Environs; Pulteney's Sketches; Brit. Bibliog.; Watt's Bibl. Brit.

Newton, Thomas, D.D., 1704–1782, a native of Lichfield, Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, Rector of St. Mary-le-Bow, London, 1744; Preb. of Westminster, 1757; Bishop of Bristol, and Canon-Residentiary of St. Paul's, 1761. Works, with Life, Lon., 1782, 3 vols. 4to. Contains: I. Dissertations on the Prophecies, (1st ed., 1754–58, 3 vols. 8vo;) II. Thirty Dissertations, chiefly on some Parts of the Old Testament; III. Nine Occasional Sermons; IV. Five Charges; V. Sixty Dissertations, chiefly on Some Parts of the New Testament. Works; 2d ed., 1787, 6 vols. 8vo. Does not contain the Dissertation on the Prophecies. This work has been separately republished; last eds., Lon., 1843, 8vo; by the Rev. W. S. Dobson, 1843, 8vo.

"A very valuable work."—Bickersteth's C. S., 473.

"Treats on many prophetic parts of the Old and New Testaments with great labour, perspicuity, and judgment, but without many original thoughts."—Williams's C. P., 288.

"The bishop's work on the prophecies is well known and has been much esteemed. He may be more safely trusted on the prophecies of the Old Testament than on those of the New. In the interpretation of the latter he is far too much influenced by secular views. On the Revelation he is altogether unsatisfactory."—Orme's Bibl. Bib.

The bishop's Sermons and Charges were pub. separately in 1824, 8vo; Analysis of the Revelation, new ed., 1845, 12mo; and Extracts from his Religious Works, 1836, 12mo. An Analysis of his work on the Prophecies is contained in Rev. Dr. J. B. Smith's Compendium of Rudiments in Theology, 1836; and his autobiography was pub. in a collection of Lives edited by Alex. Chalmers, 1816, 2 vols. 8vo. His ed. of Paradise Lost, 1749, 2 vols. 4to, and of Paradise Regained, &c. have been noticed on a preceding page, (see MILTON, JOHN, No. 39, p. 1300, ante;) and his work on the Prophecies has been also referred to: see KEITH, ALEXANDER.

"His works contain thirty dissertations on some parts of the Old Testament, and sixty chiefly on some parts of the New. These are seldom profound or original, though they contain occasionally some correct views of Scripture; but they also show that on several important points the bishop was not a believer in the doctrines of his own church."—*Orme's Bibl. Nichol, J. P., LL.D., Prof. of Astronomy in the University of Glasgow, b. about 1804, the son of a bookseller in Montrose, became schoolmaster of Dun at the early age of sixteen, and was subsequently licensed as a preacher. For many years past he has devoted his time to instruction in Astronomy, both orally by lectures in various parts of the United Kingdom, and through his very popular manuals of that noble science. 1. Views of the Architecture of the Heavens, 1838, p. 8vo; 4th ed., 1843, p. 8vo; 5th ed., 1845, p. 8vo, 21 plates and many cuts; 8th ed., with large plates of Clusters and Nebulæ recently discovered by means of the Great Telescope of Lord Rosse, and Symbolical Sketches by the late David Scott, Esq., 1850, r. 8vo. Enlarged (9th) ed., (Lib. Illust. Stand. Works,) 1851, 8vo.

"Most expounders, hitherto, of astronomical truth had been either too stilted in their style or too scientific in their substance. But here was a graceful conversation, such as an accomplished philosopher might carry on with an intelligent female under the twilight canopy, or in the window-recess, as the moon was rising." GEORGE GILFILLAN: A Second Gallery of Literary Portraits, 2d ed., Lon., 1852, 160–176.

Comprises Acoustics, Astronomy, Dynamics, Electricity, Heat, Hydrodynamics, Magnetism, Philosophy of Mathematics, Meteorology, Optics, Pneumatics, Statics, &c. In the preparation of this work Prof. Nichol had the assistance of several eminent scientific men.

"With some trifling reservation, we heartily recommend it as a most useful book of reference."—Westm. Rev., July, 1857.

Also commended by the Lon. Athen., April 4, 1857, 436. To Prof. Nichol we are also indebted for a translation of and Preliminary Dissertation to J. Willm's Education of the People, 1847, p. 8vo, (2d ed. about 1852;) and for an edition of, with an Introduction to, Quetelet on the Social System. Dr. Nichol has now (1858) in press a work entitled Republican America and Western Europe: being the result of the Author's Observations during a recent Tour through the United States.

"Professor Nichol," says Tait's Magazine, "has done much to make astronomy a lightsome science."

Nichols, John, 1744–1826, one of the most eminent literary benefactors of modern times, has already claimed our respectful notice in our articles on ATTERBURY, FRANCIS; AYSCOUGH, SAMUEL; BOWYER, WILLIAM; CAVE, EDWARD; GOUGH, RICHARD; HARDINGE, GEORGE; HOGARTH, WILLIAM, &c.; and will be hereafter mentioned from time to time as we have occasion to refer to valuable works made more valuable by his intelligent editorial supervision. For lists of works of which Mr. Nichols was author or editor, and notices of his life, see his autobiographical sketch in his Literary Anecdotes, vol. vi. (1812) 627–637, (57 of his books noticed;) Memoir of John Nichols, in Lon. Gent. Mag., 1826, Pt. 2, 489–504, (67 of his books noticed,) by Alexander Chalmers,—printed separately, 1826, 4to, pp. 17, and also reprinted in vol. viii. of the Illustrations of Literary History (post) pub. in 1858; Watt's Bibl. Brit. Our limited space permits us to notice in this place a few only of Mr. Nichols's contributions to the Republic of Letters. 1. The Origin of Printing, 1774–81: see BOWYER, WILLIAM. 2. A Collection of Royal and Noble Wills, 1780, 4to. 3. Collec. of Miscell. Poems, 1780, 4 vols. sm. 8vo. To which were added four other vols., and an Index by Macbean, in 1782. 4. The Bibliotheca Topographica Britannica, 1780–90, 4to, 52 Nos.: in conjunction with Richard Gough.

"An extremely valuable collection of topographical, antiquarian, and biographical tracts, illustrating the history of most of the counties in England and Wales, (more particularly Kent, Surrey, Beds, Berks, Middlesex, Lincolnshire, and Leicestershire,) by several of our eminent topographers."

"Distributed, as a tribute of respect, amongst a few select friends."—AUTHOR: Lit. Anec., vi. 631.

See also iii. 294. This "little brochure of 52 pages" was the germ of those admirable works, The Literary Anecdotes, 9 vols. 8vo, 6492 pp., and Illustrations of Literary History, 8 vols. 8vo, 6844 pp.; in all, 17 vols., containing 13,336 pp.

"Crescit amor nummi quantum ipsa pecunia crescit."—JUVENAL.

This holds good both of the excellent Nichols and his readers. Having perused, with inexpressible delight, 16 vols. and 12,536 pages (now before us) of the preceding library, (the 17th vol., 800 pp., has been pub. but a few days and is not yet in America,) we claim a right to expatiate with enthusiasm on its abounding merits. The order of publication was as follows. The "brochure of 52 pages" was superseded in 1782 by a quarto vol. entitled Biographical and Literary Anecdotes of William Bowyer, Printer, F.S.A., and of many of his Learned Friends, [see BOWYER, WILLIAM, pp. 229–230, ante,] &c., pp. 666. This in its turn was superseded by the following volumes: Literary Anecdotes of the Eighteenth Century; comprising Biographical Memoirs of William Bowyer, Printer, F.S.A. and many of his Learned Friends, an Incidental View of the Progress and Advancement of Literature in this Kingdom during the Last Century, and Biographical Anecdotes of a Considerable Number of Eminent Writers and Ingenious Artists; with a very Copious Index, by John Nichols, F.S.A. In Six Volumes. Vols. i.–v., 1812; vi., Part 1, [there was no Part 2: vol. vii. succeeds,] 1813; vii., Containing a Copious Index to the Preceding Volumes, 1813; vii., Part 2, Containing a Copious Index to volumes viii. and ix., 1816; [This model Index—1440 columns of Indexes to 11,554 columns of text—we have already deservedly commended in our article on Indexes in the life of Saml. Ayscough, p. 85, ante;] viii., 1814; ix., 1815. These vols. were followed by Illustrations of the Literary History of the Eighteenth Century; consisting of Authentic Memoirs and Original Letters of Eminent Persons, and Intended as a Sequel to The Literary Anecdotes, by John Nichols, F.S.A.: volumes i., ii., 1817; iii., 1818; iv., 1822; v., 1828; vi., 1831; [v. and vi. were posthumous: John Nichols died in 1826, leaving vol. v. "nearly completed at the press." His son, John Bowyer Nichols, and the son of the latter, John Gough Nichols, completed vol. v., and prepared vols. vi., vii., and viii. for the press. Vols. vii. and viii. bear on the title-page By John Bowyer Nichols;] vii., 1848; viii., 1858. Vol. viii. contains Chalmers's Memoir of Nichols, with Addenda; the Percy Correspondence, (continued from vol. vii.;) Additions and Corrections to the preceding sixteen volumes, pp. 250; and an Index to the whole eight volumes of the Illustrations. A notice of this volume will be found in the London Athenæum, March 27, 1858, 393–395. When we consider that the Bowyer Press commenced its labours about one hundred and sixty years ago, (in 1699,) and, under the management of the two Bowyers and three Nicholses, has ever since been pouring forth its contributions to the scientific, classical, biographical, bibliographical, topographical, and typographical departments of the Republic of Letters, who can fail to regard this same Bowyer Press as one of the noblest institutions of Old England, to be venerated with Magna Charta and toasted with the Bill of Rights? In our notice of that time-honoured periodical the Gentleman's Magazine, more than 200 volumes of which now gaze benignantly upon us from their "lofty" shelves, we remarked,

"It has been in one family about fourscore years; and may the Nicholses 'live a thousand years,' and issue the Gentleman's Magazine 'punctually on the first of every month!'" See CAVE, EDWARD, p. 356, ante.

Part (not the largest part) of the "thousand years" has run out since this was written, and the "Nicholses," "always ready to accommodate their numerous friends and customers," have politely acceded to our request: they "still live," and so does the Gentleman's Magazine. But, alas for the changes of "Time's whirligig," they live no longer together! The Preface to the Number for June, 1856, contains the following announcement:

"It is with mingled feelings of gratitude and of regret that we announce that, for reasons of a personal nature, the name of NICHOLS will henceforth appear less prominently on our title page.

"It is now nearly eighty years since the late Mr. John Nichols became connected with the Gentleman's Magazine, and, aided by a host of literary friends, among whom may be particularly distinguished Richard Gough, conducted it with great success to the period of his death, in the year 1826. From that until the present date it has been carried on by the proprietors, who are now induced, by the great age of the one and want of health of the other, to relinquish the chief conduct of it into other hands."

And the name of Nichols disappears from the title-page, —"no son of his succeeding." We trust, however, that the senior of the new firm, (see Vol. Two Hundred and First,) John Henry and James Parker, is a descendant of David Henry, Edward Cave's brother-in-law, who was connected with the Magazine from 1754 to '92. Before we dismiss this piece of literary genealogy, let us commend to the attention of the reader The Autobiography of Sylvanus Urban, (by Mr. John Gough Nichols,) pub. in Gent.

Mag.: chap. i., July, 1856; ii., Aug. 1856; iii., Sept. 1856; iv., Nov. 1856; v., Dec. 1856; vi., Jan. 1857; vii., Feb. 1857; viii., March, 1857; ix., April, 1857. As this last chapter brings the history down to Jan. 10, 1754, only, we trust that we shall have more of this autobiography, which is in fact a valuable chapter of the literary history of the times. See also John Nichols's Prefatory Introduction (describing the rise and progress of the Magazine) to the third volume of the General Index to the Gentleman's Magazine, 1818. But to return to Nichols's Literary Anecdotes and Illustrations of Literary History. The first was pub. (9 vols.) at £11 11*s.*; the last (8 vols.) at £8 8*s.*: in all, 17 vols., £19 19*s.* They are now worth from £13 to £15, according to condition and binding. We observe a set in Little, Brown & Co.'s (Boston) Catalogue for 1857, No. 1454, 16 vols. half calf, priced at $100, and another set, 16 vols. tree-calf, $125.

"There is hardly an instance on record," says that eminent bibliographer, Dr. Dibdin. "of such an expansion of an original biographical work. . . . To the first nine volumes an excellent Index has been added; and, running one's eye down the names of the persons in the alphabetical order in which they occur, we find such a BODY OF PERSONAL ANECDOTE as almost irresistibly compels us to buy the work, costly as it has now become, and to make it a sort of 'travelling,' as well as a 'Library,' Companion. . . . [Note.] I believe every copy has left the warehouse of Mr. [John] Bowyer Nichols, the publisher and son of the above-lauded octogenarian. The success of such an extensive and costly work shews the fondness of the English for LITERARY ANECDOTES."—Lib. Comp., 1825, 566–567; and see pp. 164, 215, 216, 510, 520.

"This work will grow more precious the older it becomes."—Maty's Review.

"I have nearly explored this [Literary Anecdotes, vol. i.] your mine of literary history; but I remain like a famished man. I am hungering after more! Any you can supply me with will be most opportune. I congratulate you in having accomplished this important work, which will now rank on our shelves with Wood's Athenæ,—a great favourite with me; yet you have the advantage of a more interesting period, from the superiority of the works and the authors."—I. D'ISRAELI: Letter to John Nichols, 20 April, 1812.

See Lon. Gent. Mag., 1848, Pt. 2, 133. See also Disraeli's Quarrels of Authors, ed. 1840, 155, 164, 177, 182, 204, 206, 221. Bolton Corney, in a review of the "fifth part" of the New [Rose's] Biographical Dictionary, remarks,

"I must here express the surprise which I have repeatedly felt at the absence of references [in the work reviewed] to the Literary Anecdotes of Mr. Nichols, who. as a female writer justly remarks, has 'poured forth such a flood of literary and biographical anecdote as is not to be equalled, for variety and interest, by any work in the English language.'"—Lon. Gent. Mag., 1840, Pt. 1, 586.

"The best-furnished warehouse for all that relates to the literary history of the period."—LORD JOHN RUSSELL.

"Where such a mass of instructive, useful, and entertaining communications on literary characters and subjects can elsewhere be found, it would not be easy to determine. There is scarcely a personage in the last century eminent for learning and talents, of whom, there is hardly a work which has excited the curiosity and attention of scholars, of whose author and contents, some information may not here be obtained."—British Critic.

"It cannot be denied that this [ed. of 1782, 4to] is one of the pleasantest and most instructive books of Literary Anecdote in the world."—DR. DIBDIN.

"No publication of modern times possesses, with equal copiousness, similar advantages and such general utility."—Lon. Gent. Mag., 1816, Pt. 2, 46–49. See also Pt. 1, 432–434, 535–538.

"One of the most important contributions ever made to the literary history of this country."—Ibid., 1848, Pt. 2, 133.

A critic in the same periodical

"holds up the work as the most curious, interesting, and satisfactory treasury of literary history ever presented to the publick."

See also Maginn's Shakspeare Papers, edited by Dr. R. S. Mackenzie, N. York, 1856, 260, n. A less commendatory notice than those just quoted of the Literary Anecdotes and Illustrations appeared in the Lon. Monthly Review, May, 1831, 49–59. The reviewer appears to us not to understand his subject. A new edition, well arranged, of the Anecdotes and Illustrations, to be comprised in four or five quarto vols., double columns, to range with Bliss's ed. of Wood's Athenæ Oxoniensis, would, we think, pay the publisher and please the public. Will Mr. John Gough Nichols undertake it? 8. The Progresses, Processions, Festivities, and Pageants of Queen Elizabeth, 4to: vols. i., ii., 1788; iii., 1804; part of a 4th vol., 1821, '23, 3 vols. 4to, £9 9*s.*: 250 copies printed. Of the old edit., copies were repeatedly sold at auction for upwards of £40. It contains some Latin complimentary poetry omitted in the second edition; but the latter has the advantage of a much better arrangement and very copious Indexes. The want of a work of this nature had been keenly felt by the historical student.

"The splendour and magnificence of Elizabeth's reign," says Bishop Percy, "is nowhere more strongly painted than in these little Diaries of her summer excursions to the houses of her nobility; nor could a more acceptable present be given to the world than the republication of a select number of such details, which strongly mark the spirit of the times and present us with scenes so very remote from modern manners."—Reliques of Ancient Poetry.

Such an "acceptable present" we have in the Progresses of Queen Elizabeth. See ASTLEY, JOHN, p. 77, ante; Lon. Month. Rev., lv. 200; H. G. Bohn's Guinea Catalogue, 1841, Nos. 19682–19687; No. 14, (post.) 9. Miscellaneous Antiquities, in continuation of the Bibliotheca Topographica Britannica, 1792–98, 4to, 6 Nos. See No. 4. 10. The History and Antiquities of the Town and County of Leicester, fol.: Pts. 1, 2, 1795; 3, 1798; 4, 1800; 5, 1804; 6, 1807, (reprinted 1810;) 7, 1811; Appendix and General Indexes, 1815. Plates, in all 522. Generally bound in 8 vols. A very fine copy, large paper, uncut, bound in 8 vols., having the original editions of the Guthlaxton and West Goscote hundreds, —which few sets contain,—on large paper, and without reprinted leaves,—in which state there are not half a dozen copies known,—was offered by Mr. H. G. Bohn, in 1841, for £73 10*s.* It will be remembered that the greater part of this edition, especially of the large-paper copies, and many other books of Mr. Nichols's, were destroyed by fire. 11. Illustrations of the Manners and Expences of Antient Times in England, 1797, 4to. 12. Complete edition of the Works of Dean Swift, 1801, 19 vols. 8vo; 1803, 24 vols. 18mo; 1808, 19 vols. 8vo.

"A valuable and laborious edition: those who peruse it must admire the labour and accuracy of the editor."—SIR WALTER SCOTT.

13. New edition of Fuller's History of the Worthies of England, 1811, 2 vols. 4to; with Notes. Mr. Nichols's editorial labours receive a very small amount of praise and a large quantity of censure from P. Austin Nuttall, in the Preface to his New Edition of Fuller's Worthies, 1840, 3 vols. 8vo. 14. The Progresses, Processes, and Magnificent Festivities of King James the First, His Royal Consort, Family, and Court; collected from Original Manuscripts, Scarce Pamphlets, Corporation Records, Parochial Registers, &c., 1828, 4 vols. 4to, £10 10*s.*: 250 copies printed. Partly posthumous.

"The title-page conveys a very imperfect idea of the contents; for, instead of being a mere account of the progresses and festivities produced for the amusement of James I., it is in fact the domestic history of his reign. . . . The research and tact which have been displayed in procuring and in dovetailing the discordant materials have seldom been equalled; and it would be difficult to name a compilation that will better repay perusal, though its chief value is as a book of reference for every person and circumstance connected with that reign."—Lon. Retrosp. Rev., 1827. 2d Ser., i. 387–396.

"Desultory as it is, and encumbered occasionally with matter not likely, nor deserving, to find readers, this collection is still an interesting and useful supplement to Mr. Nichols's former work. the Progresses of Queen Elizabeth, and. we think, excels it in variety and attractiveness of subjects."—Lon. Quar. Rev., xli. 54–85.

See also Lon. Gent. Mag., 1825, Pt. 2, 521–523; 1826, Pt. 1, 47–49, 537–540.

Of this work and the Progresses of Queen Elizabeth (see No. 8) it has been truly remarked,

"No library into which the English Chronicles, State Papers, the Harleian and Lord Somers collection of Tracts are admitted should be without these important volumes, which form a connected History of the Courts of Elizabeth and James, and afford a living picture of the manners of England, its pursuits and its amusements, for three-quarters of a century. (1553 to 1625.) They also develope numerous interesting and unknown anecdotes of most of our Noble Families, and in many cases the circumstances of their rise and first elevation to the Peerage."

The original tracts from which Mr. Nichols compiled a portion of these great historical works would some years since have commanded more than a thousand pounds from the wealthy lovers of rare books.

"If any has a mind to see in a short compass wherein we differ from the Remonstrants, &c., I refer him to a little book written by a very judicious divine of our church. 'Dr. William Nichols's Defence, &c.;' and, indeed, while Episcopius, Limborch, and Curcellæus often come into the hands of our young divines, who may not perhaps readily distinguish between the true and old doctrines and some novel corruptions, it would be very proper for them to have such a book as Dr. Nichols's at hand, for a caution to them."—Dr. Waterland: Nature, &c. of the Christian Sacraments.

Nichols's Defensio was answered by James Pierce, in his Vindication of the Dissenters, 1718, 8vo.

"They went over the whole of the subject, and left nothing of importance untouched. Dr. Nichols was looked upon as a person of note in the Establishment, and his opponent was regarded by the Dissenters as a considerable man both for his learning and judgment."—Hist. of Dissenters, iii. 203.

Nicholson, James B., a resident of Philadelphia, one of the best of modern bookbinders. A Manual of the Art of Book-Binding: containing full Instructions in the Different Branches of Forwarding, Gilding, and Finishing; also, The Art of Marbling Book-Edges and Paper. The Whole Designed for The Practical Workman, The Amateur, and The Book-Collector, Phila., 1856, 12mo, pp. 318. We commend the workmanship of Mr. Nicholson—either in his capacity of author or bookbinder—to "The Amateur and the Book-Collector." We have some specimens of his binding, on the shelves before us, which would do credit to London or Paris. Mr. Nicholson not only binds well, but he also writes well,—with fluency, vigour, and perspicuity.

Nicolas, Sir Nicholas Harris, G.C.M.G. and K.H., Barrister-at-Law, &c., 1799–1848, entered the navy in early youth, and received a lieutenant's commission before he was 16 years of age, (Sept. 20, 1815.) In 1825, he was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple, and shortly afterwards was elected a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries. In 1822, he married Sarah, youngest daughter of John Davison, Esq., of Loughton, in Essex, a descendant of the subject of Sir Nicholas's first publication. From a list of his learned and valuable works which accompanies a sketch of his life in the London Gentleman's Magazine for Oct. 1848, 425–429, (see also 562,) we select the following: 1. The Life of William Davison, Secretary of State and Privy-Counsellor to Queen Elizabeth, Lon., 1823, 8vo. This work was reviewed in Gent. Mag., xciii., Pt. 1, 521–524. 2. Notitia Historica, 1824, 8vo. See Gent. Mag., xciv., Pt. 2, 444, 621. The tabular portions of this work were remodelled and pub. as The Chronology of History, 1835, 12mo; 1838, 12mo; 1851, 12mo.

Nicoll, Alexander, D.C.L., 1793–1828, Canon of Christ Church, and Regius Professor of Hebrew in the University of Oxford, was noted for his knowledge of the Oriental tongues. As sub-librarian of the Bodleian Library, Dr. Nicoll drew up a catalogue of the MSS. brought from the East by Dr. E. D. Clarke, which was pub. and gained him great reputation, and undertook and nearly completed the general catalogue of the Eastern MSS. begun about one hundred years before by Uri. After his death a vol. of his serms. was pub., 1830, 8vo, edited, with a Memoir, by his father-in-law, Rev. James Parsons, editor of the Oxford Septuagint. "The quarto of NICOLSON of 1776 is considered to be the best: but I see no advantage which it possesses over the folio of 1736; and the previous pages of this work show the importance of the historico biographical labours of this able prelate. Either edition is worth £2 2s."—Ibid., Lib. Comp., 1825, 518.

"Priestley's Lectures [On History, &c., 1788, 4to] and Nicolson's Historical Library will give you an account of all books and sources of information belonging to English history."—Prof. Smyth's Lects. on Eng. Hist., Lect. V.

"I cannot answer your question concerning the contemporary English historians: Bishop Nicolson will be your best guide."—Robert Southey to John May, Aug. 5, 1805: Southey's Life and Corresp., chap. xi.

"A valuable work, treating both of manuscript and printed books relative to Ireland, as far as the year 1700. It may be considered as the best preparatory book for the study of Irish history."—Bibliotheca Hibernica, (of Sir Robert Peel.)

"He was a violent and wr ng-headed writer in many respects; but he had acumen, strength, and fancy."—Dibdin's Bibliomania, ed. 1842. 51.

Mr. Hargrave, in noticing the confusion found in many writers "when the Black Book, the Red Book, and the Dialogue of the Exchequer are mentioned," remarks

"And this proceeds from the want of a settled distinction between the three. Even Bishop Nicolson, to whose labours all who study either our history or the antiquities of our laws are so greatly indebted, expresses himself with inaccuracy on the subject of these three books."—Notes to Co. Lit., 1st Amer. ed., 1853, i., l. 2, c. 3 sect. 95.

Nigellus Wireker, temp. Richard I., Præcentor in the church of Canterbury, is best known as the author of the Speculum Stultorum, a satire in Latin elegiacs on the follies of his age, an account of which and other writings of this vigorous chastiser of the licentiousness of his ecclesiastical brethren will be found in Wright's Biog. Brit. Lit., Anglo-Norman Period, 351–358.

"The writings of Nigellus enjoyed a very extensive popularity in subsequent times, as we may judge by the numerous manuscripts of them still existing."—Ubi supra.

Nightingale, Miss Florence, b. 1820, in the city of Florence, the younger of the two daughters of William Edward Nightingale, of Lea Hurst, Derbyshire, (a descendant of the ancient family of Shore, Yorkshire,) pub. in 1850 The Institution at Kaiserwerth on the Rhine for the Practical Training of Deaconesses, under the direction of the Rev. Pastor Fliedner. The arduous labours of this excellent woman in nursing the sick and wounded on the Continent, in England, and especially at Scutari, have made her name familiar in many lands. See Mrs. Jameson's Sisters of Charity; Russell's Letters on the War; Miss Nightingale's Account of Kaiserwerth. £40,000 have already been subscribed (1857) to found an institution for the training of nurses under the direction of Miss Nightingale.

Of Mr. Noel's pamphlets, his Letter to the Lord-Bishop of London [on the spiritual destitution existing in the metropolis] has excited the most attention and effected a vast amount of good. Interesting information respecting the pulpit-ministrations and philanthropic labours of this excellent man will be found in The Metropolitan Pulpit, 1839, ii. 36–59; Pen-Pictures of Popular English Preachers, 1852, 58–81; Stevens's Letters from Europe; Dr. Tyng's Recollections of England; Fish's Pulpit Eloquence of the Nineteenth Century, 1857, 541–542. See also Lon. Quar. Rev., lxxviii. 382, 404; N. York Eclec. Mag., xvi. 237; Eclec. Rev., 4th Ser., xxvi. 649, (Rev. Baptist W. Noel and his Assailants.)

"Mr. Noel's preaching is eminently evangelical. The distinctive doctrines of the gospel are the topics on which he almost invariably dwells. . . . He is a most pleasing as well as instructive and impressive preacher. He is one of the few ministers whom one could hear for hours in succession without wishing they were done."—Metropol. Pulpit, ii. 38, 50.

"His voice is melodious in the extreme: one more musical we think we never heard. . . . His principal fault as a preacher is elaboration: sometimes he dilates an idea until almost all trace of it is lost or it is but faintly perceived."—Pen-Pictures, &c., 68, 73.

"Mr. Noel is not a man of masculine mind; he is rarely either original or profound; but his matter is always above mediocrity, and its eloquence is more equally sustained than that of the great majority of other popular preachers. If he never dazzles by brilliancies, he never suffers the attention to flag by descending to commonplace observations."—Fish's Pulpit Eloquence, &c., 542.

"He is certainly a most interesting and delightful preacher; altogether extemporaneous; mild and persuasive in his manner, yet sufficiently impressive, and sometimes powerful, having a very clear and consistent flow of thought; decidedly evangelical in doctrine, though less deep and instructive in doctrine, than I had expected."—Dr. Tyng's Recollections of England, 1847, 31.

"His features are very symmetrical and present a really beautiful profile. He is not very clerical in his appearance. . . . He has light hair, light-blue eyes, and, in fine, the general aspect of a good rather than a great man. . . . Baptist Noel is one of the best and most agreeable men I have met in Paris."—Stevens's Letters from Europe.

Times, May 25, 1858; Lon. Critic, June 5, 1858; Lon. Literary Gazette; and Lon. Examiner. The last-named periodical says that "Louis Blanc will secure for his book a large public. He writes well, and we commend his book;" and The Times admits that Lord Normanby has erred in his insinuations against the movers of the Revolution of 1848. A fair critic in the North American Review for July, 1858, 184–210, commends Lord Normanby's Year of Revolution, but seems to write without the advantage of the additional light which Louis Blanc's Revolutions have cast upon the historic page. The article referred to is the production of the Countess de Bury, ("Arthur Dudley" of the Revue des Deux Mondes.) Lord Normanby also pub., earlier in life, a few political pamphlets. One at least of these vols. was reprinted as late as 1728. To vol. i. (The Beatitudes) is appended Cursory Remarks upon a Book call'd An Essay concerning Human Understanding. Norris subsequently attacked Locke's philosophy at greater length in No. 12. Norris's Discourses have been commended.

12. An Essay towards the Theory of the Ideal or Unintelligible World, considering it absolutely in Itself, 1701–04, 2 vols. 8vo. This work, the labour of seven years, is designed to support the system of Malebranche against the principles of Locke's Essay on the Human Understanding. Norris's work was ridiculed in an Essay by Gabriel John: see John, Gabriel.

"Norris is more thoroughly Platonic than Malebranche, to whom, however, he pays great deference and adopts his fundamental hypothesis of seeing all things in God. He is a writer of fine genius and a noble elevation of moral sentiments, such as predisposes men for the Platonic schemes of theosophy. He looked up to Augustin with as much veneration as to Plato, and respected more perhaps than Malebranche, certainly more than the generality of English writers, the theological metaphysicians of the schools With these he mingled some visions of a later mysticism. But his reasonings will seldom bear a close scrutiny."—Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, iii. 341.

"He search'd Malebranche, and now the Rabbi knows
The secret springs whence truth and error flows.
Directed by his leading light, we pass
Through nature's rooms and tread in ev'ry maze."

The whole, with a 4th Pt., were reprinted in 1659, fol., under the title of A Forest Promiscuous of Several Seasons Productions, 1659, fol.

"The prose, which is affected and obscure, with many quotations and allusions to Scripture and the Classics, consists of essays, letters, characters in the manner of Sir Thomas Overbury, and devout meditations on his misfortunes. The verse, though not very poetic, is more natural, and written with the general ease of a man of quality."—Horace Walpole: R. and N. Authors, Park's ed., iii. 82, q. v.

Many abstracts from the Forest will be found in the Memoirs of the Peers of England,

"as it is by no means common, and as it lays open many traits of the noble author's life and character, with much energy, feeling, ability, and eloquence."—Sir Egerton Brydges: ubi supra.

The third Lord North, we are told by his grandson, Roger North, was a person

"full of fire and spirit, yet, after he had consumed the greatest part of his estate in the gallantries of King James's court, or rather of his son Prince Henry's, retired and lived more honourably in the country upon what was left than ever he had done before."

North, Sir Dudley, M.P., 1641–1691, third son of Dudley, fourth Lord North, Baron of Kirtling, was "bound to a Turkey merchant, upon the ordinary terms, to be sent abroad," and sent supercargo to Archangel and Smyrna. Of this voyage he compiled a journal, pub. by Roger North, his biographer, and left unfinished a Voyage from Smyrna, with an Account of Turkey, containing Matters little known in Europe. On his return he became a Turkey merchant to England, was knighted, and made sheriff and alderman, and subsequently became Commissioner of the Customs and a M.P. See Roger North's Lives of the Rt. Hon. Francis North, Baron of Guildford, and of Sir Dudley North; Lord Macaulay's Hist. of England, vol. i., 1849, chap. iv., and authorities there cited; North, Hon. Roger, and authorities there cited; Dubl. Univ. Mag., x. 108–205, 558–573, 708–724, (The Norths-Dudley in England;) Lon. Month. Rev., cxi. 12. As a political economist Sir Dudley North is entitled to great credit for his Discourses upon Trade, principally directed to the Causes of the Interest, Coynage, Clipping, and Increase of Money, Lon., 1691, 4to. Reprinted, Edin., 1822, 4to.

"This tract contains a more able and comprehensive statement of the true principles of commerce than any that had previously appeared, either in the English or any other language. North, who had been extensively engaged in the Turkey trade, is throughout the intelligent advocate of commercial freedom."—McCulloch's Lit. of Polit. Econ., 1845, 42–43, q. v.

It was not alone as an author that North displayed his abilities. He was an admirable statistician and excellent manager:

"Dudley North was one of the ablest men of his time. . . . The old members were annoyed at seeing a man who had not been a fortnight in the House, and whose life had been chiefly passed in foreign countries, assume with confidence and discharge with ability all the functions of a Chancellor of the Exchequer."—Lord Macaulay: ubi supra.

Alphabetical Index of Verbs Neuter, printed with Lilly's Grammar. Compiled whilst he was at school. 2. A Philosophical Essay on Music, 1677, 4to.

"An ingenious tract, written by the Lord-Keeper North, but published anonymously. Though some of the philosophy of this essay has been since found to be false, and the rest has been more clearly illustrated and explained, yet, considering the small progress which had been made in so obscure and subtil a subject as the propagation of sound, when this book was written, the experiments and conjectures must be allowed to have considerable merit."—Dr. Burney's Hist. of Music.

"The character of Guildford has been drawn at full length by his brother, Roger North, a most intolerant Tory, a most affected and pedantic writer, but a vigilant observer of all those minute circumstances which throw light on the dispositions of men. It is remarkable that the biographer, though he was under the influence of the strongest fraternal partiality, and though he was evidently anxious to produce a most flattering likeness, was yet unable to pourtray the lord-keeper otherwise than as the most ignoble of mankind: yet the intellect of Guildford was clear, his industry great, his proficiency in letters and science respectable, and his legal learning more than respectable. His faults were selfishness, cowardice, and meanness."—Lord Macaulay: Hist. of Eng., vol. iv.

"Guilford had as much law as he could contain; but he was incapable of taking an enlarged and commanding view of any subject. . . . Although he never aimed at oratory, it is said that he meditated a 'History of his Own Times.' He might have transmitted to us many curious anecdotes, but the performance must have been without literary merit; for some of his notes which he had written as materials are in the most wretched style, and show that he was unacquainted with the first principles of English composition and even with the common rules of grammar. He did publish two or three short tracts on Music and other subjects,—which were soon forgotten."—Lord Campbell: Lives of the Lord-Chancellors, vol. iii. chap. xcvii.

"He appears to have foreseen that the consequence of the violent and arbitrary measures, which he was unable to prevent, would, if continued, work the downfall of the Stuart family. His private life was temperate and regular, untainted with the vices of the times."—Sir T. N. Talfourd: Retrosp. Rev., ii. 249.

North, Frederic, second Earl of Guilford, 1732–1792, more familiarly known as Lord North, son of Francis, first Earl of Guilford, was made Chancellor of the Exchequer, and a Lord of the Treasury, in Dec. 1767; First Lord of the Treasury, Jan. 1770,—which office he held with that of Chancellor of the Exchequer during the whole of his administration, which terminated in March, 1782. In April, 1783, Lord North and Mr. Fox became Secretaries of State (the famous "Coalition") in the ministry formed by the Duke of Portland. In 1782, Lord North became Warden of the Cinque Ports, and in 1790 succeeded to the title of Earl of Guilford and to the family estates. He pub. in 1770 a Letter Recommending a New Mode of Taxation. "The light which these volumes throw upon a period described by Mr. Fox as 'one of the most singular and important of our history,' and the disclosures which they present of the court-intrigues of that day, so difficult to be understood even with all the illustrations which the researches of later times have produced, are perhaps greater than those to be derived from any other memoirs relating to the same period, with the exception of Burnet and the lately published Stuart MSS."—Editor's Preface

"Roger North's life of his brother, the lord-keeper, is the most valuable specimen of this class of our literature. It is delightful, and much beyond any other of the writings of his contemporaries."—S. T. COLERIDGE.

"This old piece of legal biography, which has been lately republished, [1808, 2 vols. 8vo.] is one of the most delightful books in the world. Its charm does not consist in any marvellous incidents of Lord Guilford's life or any peculiar interest attaching to his character, but in the unequalled naïveté of the writer, in the singular felicity with which he has thrown himself into his subject, and in his vivid delineations of all the great lawyers of his time." —SIR T. N. TALFOURD: Retrosp. Rev., 1820, ii. 238–256, and in his Crit. and Miscell. Writings.

"Roger North's Life of the Lord-Keeper, like Boswell's Life of Johnson, interests us highly without giving us a very exalted notion of the author. Notwithstanding its extravagant praise of the hero of the tale, its inaccuracies, and its want of method, it is a most valuable piece of biography, and, with Roger's lives of his brothers, 'Dudley and John,' and his 'Examen,' ought to be studied by every one who wishes to understand the history and the manners of the reign of Charles II."—LORD CAMPBELL: Life of Lord-Keeper Guilford, (Lord-Chancellors, vol. iii.)

Horace Walpole seems to have held the lord-keeper, the biography, and the biographer in utter contempt:

"Burnet and Kennet have given no very favourable character of the keeper: his relation, Roger North, has defended him in a very bulky work, which, however, does not contribute much to raise our ideas either of the writer or his subject. If that performance and its companion, the Examen, had nothing else ridiculous in them, it would be sufficient to blast their reputation that they aim at decrying that excellent magistrate,—the Lord-Chief-Justice Hale,—and that Charles the Second and that wretch the Duke of Lauderdale, the king's taking money from France and the seizure of the Charter of London, are some of the men and some of the measures the author defends! It is very remarkable [continues Walpole, in a note] that two peers of this race have suffered by ap logies written for them by two of their own relations; but with this difference naturally attending the performances of a sensible man and a weak one: Dudley, Lord North, has [in his Life of Edward, Lord North, ante] shewn himself an artful and elegant historian; Roger North, a miserable biographer."—Lives of R. and N. Authors, Park's ed., iii. 278.

"We cannot say we should propose Roger North as a model for the biographer to imitate; but he had the advantage of the strictest and most confidential intimacy with the subjects of his pen, and wrote with a very reasonable share of impartiality."—Lon. Retrosp. Rev., 1822, v. 136–156.

But the Council, not feeling authorized to commence a series of literary publications, yet impressed with the value of the work, have suggested its independent publication to their secretary, Dr. Rimbault, under whose editorial care it accordingly appeared.

Gent. Mag., April, 1828, Pt. 1, 334; and of the Second Series, 1833, p. 8vo, in Lon. Athenæum, April 6, 1833, 209. 3. The Life of Titian, with Anecdotes of the Distinguished Persons of his Time, 1830, 2 vols. 8vo. In the composition of this work William Hazlitt had—to say the least—a large share; and he assisted the author in the preparation of his other works.

"These volumes [The Life of Titian] contain a great mass of curious and amusing matter, and much food for serious reflection. . . . The most valuable part of the work we take to be the original remarks of Mr. Northcote himself, on art generally, on the peculiar qualities of the Venetian school, and on the style of Titian, its illustrious chief."—Lon. Literary Gazette.

"Such a work as this has long been wanted, and could not have been consigned to more competent hands than those of our own talented countrymen."—Lon. Courier.

Northcote contributed a number of papers to periodicals, —The Artist, Edinburgh Review, Chronicle, and Examiner. For the Fine Arts of the English School he wrote a biographical sketch of Sir Joshua Reynolds, which, as we have seen, was afterwards expanded into a portly quarto. He was fond of playing the critic, both conversationally and with the pen; and his comments were not always relished by his brother artists:

"An eminent painter indeed," remarks a lively contributor to Blackwood,—"and the fact is worthy of notice—is seldom an unkindly critic; and we scarcely can remember an instance—excepting only the waspish and ill-natured Northcote, whose malice was elfin and characteristic and had little to do with his profession—of an old man, with any reputation in art, who has not been the most gentle and tender-hearted of censors, willing to perceive excellence and slow to condemn any honest effort."—Dec. 1855: Modern Light Literature,—Art.

Some of the critiques which excited such vehement disgust will be found in Hazlitt's Conversations of Northcote, originally contributed to the New Monthly Magazine, and collected in an octavo vol. in 1830, during Northcote's lifetime. The Court Journal calls this

"One of the most remarkable volumes that have issued from the press for several years past, and not less valuable than remarkable."

Christopher North, however, and Tickler, placed a far lower estimate on Northcote's dicta: see Noctes Ambrosianæ, Nov. 1826, R. S. Mackenzie's ed., 1855, vol. ii. 295–296. Hazlitt himself cannot say enough in commendation of Northcote's conversational abilities; and the artist seems to have avoided the gross but common and most offensive error of monopolizing the talk:

"The best converser I know," remarks the former, "is the best listener. I mean Mr. Northcote, the painter. . . . His manner is quite picturesque. There is an excess of character and naïveté that never tires. His thoughts bubble up and sparkle like beads on old wine. . . . I have lived on his conversation with undiminished relish ever since I can remember; and when I leave it I come out into the street with feelings lighter and more ethereal than I have at any other time. One of his tête-à-têtes would at any time make an Essay; but he cannot write himself, because he loses himself in the connecting passages, is fearful of the effect, and wants the habit of bringing his ideas into one focus or point of view."—Hazlitt's Table-Talk: On the Conversation of Authors.

It appears, however, that the charming talker had a convenient friend who could enjoy his conversation and repay the obligation by acting as his amanuensis,—see Memoirs, Anecdotes, &c.,—to use a modest term. The literary merits of Northcote's works are not considerable, but the Fables are commended by their illustrations and their morality, and the Lives of Reynolds and Titian by their valuable notices of eminent artists and men of letters. See Memoir and Anecdotes, &c. of Northcote, in Lon. Gent. Mag., 1831, Pt. 2, 102, 104, 105, 106, 598; Haydon's Diary. It has been the fashion of late days to depreciate the merits of Northcote's pictures; but, on the other side, it is to be observed that "whenever they have been resold at auctions they have always been knocked down for more than four times their original price, and, what is more, they have generally been purchased by men of rank and taste."—Smith's Life of Nollekens, ii. 424.

Norton, Andrews, D.D., 1786–1853, a descendant of the Rev. John Norton, of Ipswich and Boston, (1606–63,) was a native of Hingham, Massachusetts; graduated at Harvard University, 1804; tutor at Bowdoin College, 1809–10; tutor in Mathematics at Harvard, 1811–12; Lecturer upon Biblical Criticism and Interpretation in the same institution, 1813–19; Dexter Professor of Sacred Literature, 1819–30; and College Librarian, 1813–21. In 1821, he was married to Catherine, daughter of Samuel Eliot, of Boston. In 1830, he resigned his professorship in consequence of ill health, and spent the rest of his days at Cambridge, in literary retirement, varied by a cordial and generous hospitality. 1. In the London ed., (Chapman, Brothers,) vol. i. (pp. 357) contains the matter of the 1st vol. of the American ed., and vol. ii. (pp. 567) the remainder of the work. The author's arrangement of his work is as follows: Part I, Proof that the Gospels remain essentially the same as they were Originally Composed; Part 2, Historical Evidence that the Gospels have been ascribed to their True Authors; Part 3, On the Evidences for the Genuineness of the Gospels afforded by the Early Heretics.

"He has placed beyond dispute the authorship of our canonical Gospels; and, this point being established, little is left for the defender of the Christian faith to do; for, if our Gospels were written by the men whose names they bear, the authenticity of their records and the divine mission of their great Teacher hardly need the show of argument."—A. P. Peabody, D.D.: N. Amer. Rev., xlv. 206–222. (Review of vol. i., 1837.)

See also N. Amer. Rev., lxxxi. 281, (also by Dr. Peabody.)

"A work [vol. i., 1837] which few can be fully competent to criticize, but which no person can peruse without confessing the acuteness and strength of its reasoning, the nice discrimination of its criticism, and the precision and purity of its diction. Whatever difference of opinion may be formed as to some of its conclusions, no one will deny that the originality and importance of its views make it a substantial accession to theological science; and that, within the range permitted by the subject, it presents, on the whole, one of the noblest specimens of scholarship and elegance of composition to be found in our youthful literature."—Wm. H. Prescott: Hist. of the Reign of Ferd. and Isabella, 11th ed., 1856, iii. 325–326, n.

"His great work on the Genuineness of the Gospels—a magnificent monument of erudition, logic, and taste—exhausts the argument, supersedes all that had before been written upon it in modern times, and establishes on an immovable basis that cardinal fact in the evidences of Christianity."—John G. Palfrey.

"Professor Norton has devoted a whole volume full of ingenious reasoning and solid learning to show that the Gnostic sects of the second century admitted in general the same sacred books with the orthodox Christian. However doubtful may be his complete success, he has made out a strong case, which, as far as it goes, is one of the most valuable confutations of German Chorizontes, an excellent subsidiary contribution to the proof of the 'genuineness of the Scriptures.' . . . His work on the Genuineness of the Scriptures is of a high intellectual order."—Lon. Quar. Rev.

"In Mr. Norton himself we rejoice to recognize one who has brought to the investigation of the genuineness of the Gospels all the requisite qualifications in no common degree. His learning is full and sound, and he has taken nothing at second hand. His spirit is calm and his purpose candid and honest. . . . His logical qualities are also of the highest order. . . . We receive his work with much satisfaction, and hail it as a highly-valuable addition to the defences of our holy religion. . . . The part of Mr. Norton's work which relates to the Jewish dispensation and the Old Testament has filled us with much distress in consequence of the lax and dangerous sentiments he there advances."—*Bost. "In point of exquisite finish," remarks the present editor of the North American Review, the Rev. Dr. A. P. Peabody, "the few poems of the late Andrews Norton are unsurpassed and almost unequalled. The most sagacious critic would find it hard to hint a fault or to propose an emendation. They indicate profound feeling, chastened yet intensified by a severely fastidious taste, which held emotion in suspense till it could find the very word which of all others answered to the thought. Their glow is therefore not that of the kindling fire, but that of burning coals on the heart-altar, manifesting the calmness of a sustained fervour, which never flashes or scintillates, and at the same time never wanes or flickers."—*N. Norton, Hon. Augusta. Poems in Blackwood's Magazine, xxxii. 971, xxxiii. 123, xxxiv. 172, 219.

Norton, Hon. Caroline Elizabeth Sarah, b. 1808, is a daughter of Thomas Sheridan, a grand-daughter of Richard Brinsley Sheridan, a sister of the Duchess of Somerset and Lady Dufferin, (p. 526, ante,) and wife of the Hon. George Chapple Norton, (brother of the present Lord Grantley,) Recorder of Guilford, and a police-magistrate of London. This gentleman sought her hand in 1824, gained it in 1827, and resigned it in 1836. There has been no divorce, and since that period no intercourse. These are not matters on which we feel called upon to exercise adjudication; and in the present instance we imply neither censure nor exculpation of any party when we observe that Mrs. Norton seems to enjoy the almost unbounded confidence, admiration, and affection of those who have recorded their opinions on the unhappy difference which first caused and has so long perpetuated a divided household. 1. "The present volume is an improvement on its predecessor. [The Sorrows of Rosalie, written, we believe, when Mrs. Norton was very young. Note.] The next (for in the glass of futurity we see others) will, we are sure, be a still greater improvement on the present, provided always Mrs. Norton eschews the supernatural and the exaggerated, and trusts to her power of depicting the calmer aspects of life and

'The common thoughts of mother earth,

Edin. Rev., liii. 361–369, June, 1831.

"The ambition of this lady is to be original and effective in her productions. There is something about her of Lady Morgan's 'Wild Irish Girl,'—a good deal of enthusiasm, a copious flow of diction, a strong feeling of poetry, but scarcely a gleam of true poetic feeling."—Lon. Month. Rev., cxxiii. 29, Sept. 1830, 29–38. (A cutting critique.)

"If one or two poems of equal grace and originality with this were produced, we think that it would go far to recover the public from the apathy into which it has fallen with regard to poetry. In the conception of the plot, and in general treatment, the metrical romance before us is an honour to the modern literature of the country, and is the more interesting as being the work of a woman."—*Lon. "The present volume cannot but be accepted on Mrs. Norton's part as a step in advance of her former works. Her verse has more depth of thought, more regularity of structure, than formerly: increased sweetness of cadence could hardly have been expected, for Mrs. Norton's poetry was always instinct with melody."—Lon. Athen., 1840, p. 511.

"This lady," says H. N. Coleridge, in a notice of Mrs. Norton's poetry often quoted, "is the Byron of our modern poetesses. She has very much of that intense personal passion by which Byron's poetry is distinguished from the larger grasp and deeper communion with man and nature of Wordsworth. She has also Byron's beautiful intervals of tenderness, his strong practical thought, and his forceful expression."—*Lon. Quar. 6. The Child of the Islands; a Poem, 1845, r. 8vo; 2d ed., 1846, p. 8vo; 3d ed., 1854, 8vo. The "Child of the Islands" is the (then) infant Prince of Wales.

"In this poem we have a picture of England and the social condition of her children, designed to remedy in some measure the want of communication between classes and impress the imagination of the future 'ruler of the islands' with a due sense of the wants, trials, and temptations of his humbler fellow-creatures.

"This brilliant volume has not materially softened our suspicion that the present purveyors of our popular literature are on a false track. We still doubt whether any great good will come of this eternal reproduction in imaginative works of the 'Condition of-England Question.' . . . There can be no question that the performance bears throughout the stamp of extraordinary ability: the sense of easy power very rarely deserts us. But we pause on the bursts of genius: and they are many. . . . We wish we had room for a score more of these masterly sketches; but we hope we have given enough, not to excite attention, for that such gifts employed with such energy must at once command, even were the name on the title-page a new one, but enough to show that we have not observed with indifference this manifestation of developed skill, this fairest wreath as yet won in the service of the graver Muses for the name of SHERIDAN."—J. G. LOCKHART: Lon. Quar. Rev., lxxvi. 1–11, June, 1845.

"Topics so common to the literature of the times, and a plan so arbitrary and artificial, can have little intrusive power. The interest of the work must arise from its workmanship; and the merit of this is great in several points of view. Ease and finish of diction prevail throughout, with much beauty of thought and imagery, and a spirited style."—Lon. Spectator.

See also Westm. Review, xliii. 460.

To Mrs. Norton's abiding honour be it recorded that "The real character of The Child of the Islands is a series of outpourings upon the condition of the poor."—Lon. Spectator, ubi supra.

This holy cause was not a new theme with Mrs. Norton: in her Voice from the Factories in 1836, (ante,) in her Letters to the London Times in 1841, and in the stirring eloquence of "immortal verse" at various times and seasons, she had pleaded on behalf of the poor and the desolate, the criminal and the outcast, the miserable and the forsaken. And we venture to assert that in the retrospection of such advocacy she takes far greater delight than in recounting the many willing tributes of admiration and sympathy which beauty, genius, and sorrow have gathered from two hemispheres.

7. Stuart of Dunleath: a Story of Modern Times, 1847, 3 vols. p. 8vo; 1851, 3 vols. p. 8vo. This novel was warmly commended,—too warmly, thought one of the London reviewers:

"We cannot quite share the enthusiasm of some of our contemporaries," remarks the London Critic, "so as to term this novel 'pre-eminent and peerless.' It is a very clever novel; but it is not what the Examiner calls it."—May 15, 1851, 230.

The Athenæum was very indignant at the complicated horrors of the plot:

"Can fable be imagined," it asks, after an outline sufficiently sombre, indeed, "more dismal than this? We may further ask whether such a remorseless persecution of the truthful, the gifted, and the loving by destiny is either veritable or wholesome as the argument of fiction? To ourselves the answer comes readily."—May 3, 1851, 470.

We may here properly observe that two other novels, and also a vol. of Tales and Sketches, have been ascribed to Mrs. Norton; but, as we are unable to satisfy ourselves of their authenticity, we omit their titles. 8. "A most animated and sprightly picture of the state of society at Sierra Leone, the point and cleverness of which is, we apprehend, to be placed to the credit of the talented editor fully as much as to that of the original writer of the letters."—John Bull.

We have before us still unquoted a number of critical opinions on Mrs. Norton's characteristics as a writer; but now the time for quotation is past. "Her ear for the modulation of verse is exquisite; and many of her lyrics and songs carry in them the characteristic of the ancient Douglases, being alike 'tender and true.' It must be owned, however, that individuality is not the most prominent feature of Mrs. Norton's poetry."—Moir's Poet. Lit. of the Past Half-Century. 275.

"Melancholy is the prevailing tendency of her mind; and, though we cannot but regret that one whose society never fails to confer pleasure should have so often been disappointed in its search herself, we cannot but rejoice that circumstances should have thrown her genius into that which was perhaps its natural channel, and enriched our literature, both in poetry and prose, with so many gems of the pathetic, which are indelibly engraven on the memory of all who are acquainted with them."—SIR ARCHIBALD ALISON: Hist. of Europe, 1815–52, chap. v.

This is meant to be very civil; but it does not strike us as particularly well turned. We may be conscious of a saddened pleasure in the dying notes of the swan, but we hardly avow our satisfaction that "circumstances" should have precipitated the discovery of the "natural channel."

Norton, Charles B., b. at Hartford, Conn., 1825, has been for some years settled in the city of N. York as a bookseller, publisher, and agent for public and private libraries. Under his name have appeared (1) A Hand-Book of Life Assurance, N. York, 12mo, and three valuable periodicals,—viz.: 2. Literary Advertiser, N. York, May, 1851–Dec. 15, 1851, Nos. 1–8. 3. Literary Gazette, Jan. 15, 1852–July 16, 1855: 1852, 12 Nos., 1853, 12 Nos., 1854, 24 Nos., 1855, 14 Nos.,—62 Nos. in all. These periodicals were well conducted. The Literary Gazette was succeeded by another excellent periodical,—The Criterion: Literary and Critical Journal, Nov. 3, 1855–July 12, 1856, Nos. 1–37. Mr. Charles Rode, the intelligent editor and proprietor of The Criterion, was induced, on the close of this periodical, to assume the editorial duties connected with the American Publishers' Circular and Literary Gazette, (No. 1, September 1, 1855, N. York,) which post he still retains. 4. Literary Register; or, Annual Book-List for the Years 1852–53–54–55.

York, 1855, 12mo. To Mr. Norton we are also indebted for the American Appendix to Stephens's Book of the Farm; or,—as the only correct American edition of that valuable work is styled, —The Farmer's Guide to Scientific and Practical Agriculture, N. York, (Leonard Scott & Co.,) 1858, 2 vols. r. 8vo, pp. 1600, with numerous Illustrations. Mr. Norton was succeeded in this important professorship by Professor John A. Porter. We say "important,"—and truly; for, if he who increases the produce of the earth by but one blade of grass be declared a benefactor, of what honour shall he be thought worthy who duplicates "the joy of the harvest" throughout a continent! present date, (1858.) Dr. Nott has pub. a number of baccalaureate and other sermons, addresses, &c., and the two following valuable volumes: 1. Counsels to Young Men on the Formation of Character and the Principles which lead to Success and Happiness in Life, N. York, 18mo.

"The fruit of experience and deep religion. New ed., with an Introduction by Tayler Lewis, LL.D.; edited by Amasa McCoy, late editor of The Prohibitionist, N. York, 1857, 12mo, pp. 241. There are in this vol. eleven lectures and an appendix.

"They constitute the most able, thorough, and efficient argument that has yet been constructed for the disuse of all intoxicating liquors. They are free from fanaticism, and full-fraught with Christian philanthropy. . . . The appendix contains, among other valuable documents, Bishop [Alonzo] Potter's admirable 'Address on the Drinking Usages of Society.'"—A. P. PEABODY: N. Amer. Rev., lxxxv. 572.

"It is my belief that in the proportion that this work is circulated and read the cause of temperance will advance and be perpetuated," &c.—E. C. DELAVAN, Esq. (Unpublished Letter.)

Dr. Nott's successful labours for the benefit of Union College are as familiar to the present generation as the fame of his pulpit-eloquence was to their grandfathers. One of the most celebrated specimens of the latter (The Fall of Hamilton, delivered July 29, 1840) has been recently republished in Fish's Pulpit Eloquence of the Nineteenth Century, 1857, 379–393.

"The Rev. Dr. Nott is, as we deem, the most eloquent divine of the orthodox class among us. Some of his printed discourses are splendid productions, though perhaps too glittering and laboured. He has the reputation, besides being an accomplished and elegant scholar, of being a most exemplary and worthy man."—REV. TIMOTHY FLINT: Sketches of the Lit. of the U. States: Lon. Athen., 1835, 716.

He has also extended his researches to some branches of natural philosophy; and in the Digest of Patents will be found thirty in his name granted for applications of heat to steam-engines, the economical use of fuel, &c.

Gliddon, Types of Mankind, &c., Lon. and Phila., 1854, 4to: see GLIDDON, GEORGE R.; MORTON, SAMUEL GEORGE, M.D. Since the notices of the Types of Mankind (pp. 678–679, ante) were printed, we have met with another review of that volume in the Westminster Review, April, 1856, in which the critic expresses the opinion that "The writers of the 'Types of Mankind' have done well by this fresh and rich contribution to the science of ethnology, the result of very diligent inquiry, towards recalling attention to the question of its true philosophy."

Mr. George R. Gliddon, one of the authors of the volume, died at Panama, Nov. 16, 1857, aged 50. See Historical Magazine, (New York,) Jan. 1858, 32. 3. With George R. "We had had a little experience of how our American friends treat ethnological questions in the 'Types of Mankind;' and when a work of the same portentous size, with the same ugly heads of 'inferior races,' the same list of subscribers, and the same editors, made its appearance, we feared that the cause of ethnological science could not gain much thereby."—Lon. Athen., 1857, 1140.

We need hardly observe that the learned in these subjects will not be willing to abide by the dicta of reviewers, but will examine the points in controversy for themselves. Dr. Nott has contributed articles on Ethnology, Medical Science, Life-Insurance, &c. to the Amer. Jour. of Med. Science, Charleston Med. Jour., New Orleans Med. Jour., South. Quar. Rev., De Bow's Commercial Rev., and other periodicals. He is also the author of an Appendix ("containing a Summary of the Latest Scientific Facts bearing upon the Question of Unity or Plurality of Species") to H. Hatz's translation of Count A. De Gobineau's Moral and Intellectual Diversity of Races, Phila., 1857, 12mo.

Nott, Samuel, D.D., 1781–1852, a grandson of the Rev. Abraham Nott, of Wethersfield, Connecticut, and a brother of Eliphalet Nott, D.D., (ante,) was a native of Saybrook, Conn., graduated at Yale College in 1780, and in 1782 settled at Norwich, (then usually called West Farms, now Franklin,) Conn., where he remained until his death, (hastened by a severe burn,)—a period of seventy years. He pub. fourteen occasional sermons, 1786–1842, of which a list, with interesting notices of his life, will be found in an excellent work recently published, —Dr. Wm. B. This zealous advocate of the Reformation was the author of a few theological treatises—against Dorman and Campion, &c., and a Defence of Bishop Jewel—pub. 1566–1668, but is best known by his Catechismus, sive prima Institutio Disciplinaque Pietatis Christianæ, Latine Explicata, 1570, 4to, (1st ed.,) and often reprinted. An abridgment, also in Latin, appeared in the same year; and also in 1570 Thomas Norton (ante) pub. an English trans. of the Larger Catechism, 4to, and about that time an English trans. of the abridgment. The Greek trans. of the Larger Catechism is said to have been printed in 1573, and of the Smaller in 1575; but there seems to be some uncertainty in these dates, (v. authorities post.) What is called Nowell's Third Catechism has been supposed to be the same in whole or in part as the Church Catechism in the English Liturgy. Strype expressly assigns the Church Catechism to Nowell; but Churton, Nowell's biographer, questions his title to it, and is disposed to attribute it to Poinet, afterwards Bishop of Winchester. When we speak of "Nowell's Catechism," without explanation, we refer to his larger Catechismus, 1570, &c. There have been several new edits. of this in Latin pub. at Oxford recently,—viz.: 1830, 1835, and (cura G. Jacobson) 1844. Last ed. of Norton's trans., Lon., 1846, 12mo. Nowell's Catechisms greatly aided the Reformation in England, and were highly valued by those who favoured ecclesiastical and theological changes:

"For a catechism I refer them to that which was made by the learned and godly man Mr. Nowell, Dean of St. Paul's, received and allowed by the Church of England and very fully grounded upon the word of God. There you may see all the parts of true religion revived, the difficulties expounded, the truth declared, and the corruptions of the Church of Rome rejected."—BISHOP COOPER.

Bickersteth calls Nowell's and Edward the Sixth's Catechisms

"Two admirable catechisms in the spirit of the Reformation."—Christian Student, 1844, 464.

But Dr. Wordsworth observes that Nowell's Catechism is "not only of an un-evangelical but of a Calvinistic tendency, and is at the same time very unsatisfactory, further, on the principle of church-government."

Noy, William, 1577–1634, a native of Cornwall, educated at Exeter College, Oxford, whence he removed to Lincoln's Inn, was a member of the Parliaments of 1620, '23, '25, and the one following, and in all greatly distinguished himself by his opposition to the king's prerogative. His political sentiments, however, were suddenly changed in 1631 by his appointment to the post of attorney-general. Henceforth he disgusted even such zealous royalists as Clarendon by originating and urging some of the extreme measures which resulted in the ruin of Charles II.:

"thinking that he [Noy] could not give a clearer testimony that his knowledge of the law was greater than all other men's than by making that law which all other men believed not to be so. So he moulded, framed, and pursued the odious and crying project of soap, and with his own hand drew and prepared the writ for ship-money, both of which will be the lasting monuments of his fame."—Hist. of the Rebellion, book i., ed. "As Lord Hale makes so frequent a reference to Noy's Reports, it may not be amiss to apprise the student that though the booke is known by the name of that very learned lawyer, yet there is not the least reason to suppose that such a loose collection of notes was intended by him for the public eye. In an edition of Noy's Reports penes editorem, there is the following observation upon them in manuscript: A simple collection of scraps of cases made by Serjeant Size from Noy's loose papers, and imposed upon the world for the reports of that vile prerogative fellow Noy. This account of Noy's Reports, which was probably written soon after the first publication in 1656, though expressed in terms inexcusably gross, contains an anecdote not altogether useless. 2 Ro. "I have lost a near friend in him," writes Laud, in his Diary, "and the Church the greatest she has had of his condition since she needed any such."

But there were others of the late attorney-general's fellow-citizens who bore his loss with more equanimity:

"The generality of the commons rejoyced. The vintners drank carouses, in hopes to dress meat again and sell tobacco. beer, &c., which by a sullen capricio Noy restrained them from. The players, also, for whom he had done no kindness, did, the next term after his decease, make him the subject of a merry comedy, stiled A Projector lately dead, &c."—*Wood's Athen. Noyes, Eli, D.D., 1814–1855, of the American Freewill Baptist Society, a native of Jefferson, Maine; ordained in 1834; laboured as a missionary at Orissa, India, from 1835 to '41. After his return to America on account of ill health, he officiated as a pastor in Boston, Mass., and in other places, and was for two years editor of the (Freewill Baptist) Morning Star. He died at Lafayette, Indiana. He was the author of A Hebrew Reader, and Lects. on the Truth of the Bible, Bost., 1853, 12mo, &c.

Noyes, George Rapall, D.D., b. at Newburyport, Mass., March 6, 1798, was for some time a tutor in Harvard University, subsequently acted as pastor of a church at Brookfield, Mass., and afterwards took charge of a congregation at Petersham, Mass.; from 1840 to the present time (1858) Hancock Professor of Hebrew, &c. and Dexter Lecturer in Harvard University. 1. An Amended Version of the Book of Job; with an Introduction and Notes, chiefly Explanatory, Camb., 1827, 8vo, pp. 200; 2d ed., Bost., 1838, 12mo.

"We feel in duty bound to say that the kind of learned labour exhibited in this volume has. in our opinion, fallen into very competent hands. . . . We might proceed to point out many particular instances in which Mr. Noyes has improved upon the common version. . . . If there is any thing of superfluity in Mr. Noyes's notes, it is in the illustration of the sentiment in the text of his version, in some cases where it is not uncommon or peculiar. by citation from the ancient classics. . . . All that we should expunge would make a very slight diminution of the materials of the volume."—S. WILLARD: N. Amer. Rev., xxvi. 40–59.

"From what we know of their merits and what we have seen of their circulation. we feel persuaded that the author will be rewarded by knowing that he has been useful to thousands who desired to read the Scriptures with understanding, and have so often met with difficulties that they have been almost in despair."—*N. "He has diligently availed himself of all the best critical aids. The notes are very brief; but it is to be regretted 'that some things are to be found in them which show that Mr. Noyes has a very low opinion of the inspiration of the Bible, and which will preclude a large class of readers from obtaining much instruction from what is really valuable.' "The volume now before us corresponds in style of execution and in its claims upon the public regard and gratitude with those that preceded it. It makes with them a complete version of the poetical portion of the Hebrew canon. . . . The series was not commenced till the author had made himself second to none in his qualifications for his task. . . . We regard these works of Dr. Noyes not only as worthy and useful in a religious point of view, but as among the ripest fruits of American scholarship and the most valuable contributions to American literature. They have won for him the highest reputation both at home and abroad, and have received the warmest praise from critics of various denominations. They must take their place in that brief list of sacred classics that will not need expurgation till the language in which they are written grows obsolete."—A. P. PEABODY, D.D.: *N. Amer. Nuttall, Thomas, a native of Yorkshire, England, Curator and Lecturer at the Botanic Garden, Cambridge, (Harvard University,) 1822–28, has been since about 1841 principally resident in Great Britain. He resides at present (1858) about fifty miles from Liverpool, England. In his earlier years he travelled extensively through the United States whilst pursuing his botanical researches, and gave some valuable results of his explorations to the public. 1. "As a preacher, Dr. O'Beirne ranked in the first class. His sermons seldom related to the thorny points of controversial theology. He was generally satisfied with expatiating on the grand and essential doctrines of Christianity, and his diction was perspicuous, animated, and nervous. He was occasionally sublime, frequently pathetic, and always intelligible."—Annual Biography, vol. vii.

Occam, or Ockham, Nicholas of, flourished 1320, bred a Franciscan in Oxford, was the 18th Public Lecturer of his convent in that university.

"He is highly praised by the writers of his own order for his learning, whom I do believe, notwithstanding Bale writeth so bitterly against him."—Fuller's Worthies, ed. 1840, iii. 213.

See Bale's De Scriptoribus Britannicis Cent V. Num. 17.

Occam, or Ockham, William of, so called from the place of his nativity,—Ockham, in Surrey,—was a member of the order of Franciscans, a pupil of Duns Scotus, a reviver of the opinions of the Nominalists, and was dignified by the title of the Invincible Doctor by the Pope, and styled the Venerable Preceptor, the Singular Doctor, and the Unparalleled Doctor, by others. In the early part of the fourteenth century he taught at Paris; was excommunicated by the Pope for opposing his secular authority in his published treatise De Potestate Ecclesiastica et Seculari and other writings; was protected by the King of France, and subsequently by the Emperor of Germany; afterwards submitted to the Church and received absolution, and died at Munich in 1347.

His (1) Opus Nonaginta Dierum, (2) Dialogus, (3) Compendium Errorum Joannis XXIII., (4) Super Potestate Pontificis VIII., and (5) Quæstionum Decisiones, all originally printed in 1495–96 at Lyons, have been reprinted by Mich. Goldast in his Monarchia S. Romani Imperii. His (6) Quodlibeta VII. cum Tractatii de Sacramenta Altaris was printed at Paris, 1487, at Strasbourg, 1491; (7) Summa totus Logicæ, Paris, 1488, Bologna, 1498, Oxford, 1675; (8) Expositio super totam Artem Veterem, and (9) Summulæ in Libras Physicorum, were printed at Bologna about 1498. "He revived the sect of the Nominalists, formerly instituted by Roscelin, and with some important variations of opinion, brought into credit by Abelard, but afterwards overpowered by the great weight of leading schoolmen on the opposite side.—that of the Realists. . . . He confined reality to objective things, denying it to the host of abstract entities brought forward by Scotus."—Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe. 1854, i. 17, 183.

"He denied that ideas had any other real existence than what they possess in the understanding by which they are contemplated. . . . He did but sketch the principles of a philosophy afterwards completed; but his labours sufficed to withdraw the attention of his followers from the all-engrossing question of the principle of individuality, and directed them rather to the acquirement of fresh knowledge."—Tenneman's Manual, Johnson's trans., 1832, 252.

"If he has done well to demonstrate that there is no immediate perception of God, that God is known only by his attributes.—wisdom, goodness, power, etc.,—he may be reproached with having obscured and enfeebled the proper notion of the essence of God."—Cousin's Course of the Hist. of Mod. Philos., Lect. IX., Wight's trans., 1854, ii. 33.

"The doctrine of Ockham, which by necessary implication refuses moral attributes to the Deity and contradicts the existence of a moral government, is practically equivalent to atheism."—Sir James Mackintosh: Prelim. Diss. Encyc. Brit., 310.

"Occam was of a right sincere judgment as the times would then give or suffer."—Foxe's Martyrology.

"Our Ockham, flushed with success against John Scotus, undertook another John, of higher power and place, even Pope John the Three-and-Twentieth, and gave a mortal wound to his temporal power over princes."—Fuller's Worthies, ed. 1840, iii. 214.

Selden says that Occam's works against the Papal authority are "the best that had been written in former ages on the Ecclesiastical Power."

"The testimony of Selden has peculiar weight in behalf of a Popish schoolman."—Edin. Review.

"He questioned the infallibility of the Pope in judging even of doctrinal matters, and, unlike the general majority who shared his feelings on this head, he was unwilling to accept a General Council as the court of ultimate appeal."—Hardwicke's Middle Ages.

See an account of the English version of this Dialogue in Oldys's Brit. Lib., 6–10. It is not to be wondered at, therefore, that Luther kept Occam's books always at hand in his library; and it is asserted that he studied no other schoolman.

Ockley, Simon, 1678–1720, a native of Exeter, educated at Queen's College, Cambridge; Vicar of Swavesey, 1705; Arabic Professor at Cambridge, 1711, until his death. He pub. two occasional serms., 1710–13, and several works, the most important of which are: 1. Introductio ad Linguis Orientales, Cantab., 1706, 12mo. 2. Hist. of the Present Jews throughout the World, 1707, 12mo. 3. Hist. of the Conquest of Egypt, Persia, Syria, &c. by the Saracens, &c., 632–705, Lon., 2 vols. 8vo: vol. i., 1708; ii., 1718; 2d ed., 1718, 2 vols. 8vo; 3d ed., with addits. by Dr. Long, 1757, 2 vols. 8vo; 4th ed., revised, improved, and enlarged, 1847, 12mo, (Bohn's Stand. Lib.)

"Upon its first publication this work was received by scholars with marked approbation, as the most complete and authentic account of the Arabian Prophet and his successors which had yet been given to the world; and even at the present day, after the lapse of nearly [much more than] a century, it continues to be regarded as the standard history of this eventful period. . . . In a future volume it is intended to give a continuation of Ockley's work to the extinction of the Bagdad Caliphate, which will be found to contain information both interesting and instructive to the general reader. H. G. B.

"York Street, March, 1847."

Advert. to Mr. Bohn's ed., (4*th.*) 1847.

We should be pleased to welcome this promised "continuation." Gibbon, in his Decline and Fall, draws largely on Ockley's work, and describes the author as "a learned and spirited interpreter of Arabian authorities, whose tales and traditions afford an artless picture of the men and the times."—Decline and Fall.

In his Autobiography he represents him as "an original in every sense, who had opened his eyes."

"He [Ockley] perhaps was the first who exhibited to us other heroes than those of Rome and Greece,—sages as contemplative and a people more magnificent even than the iron masters of the world."—Disraeli's Miscell. of Lit., ed. 1840, 129–132, q. v. for a pathetic account of Ockley, who finished his History whilst confined in jail for debt.

Poor Ockley says himself,

"Had I not been forced to snatch every thing that I have, as it were, out of the fire, our Saracen History should have been ushered into the world after a different manner."

"The very curious history of the Saracens, given by Ockley, should be consulted, and is somewhat necessary to enable the student more exactly to comprehend the character of the Arabians, which is there displayed, by their own writers, in all its singularities."—Prof. Smyth's Lects. on Mod. Hist., Lect. III.

A critic in the London Quarterly Review, referring to the obstacles which discourage the writing "the history of a distant nation," remarks,

"There have been, indeed, some splendid instances of success in this most difficult branch of authorship: and whoever has sufficient courage to begin the perusal of the History of the Saracens by Ockley, or the Abyssinian Annals of Bruce, will find his tedium and trouble overpowered and overpaid by the strong moral painting and dramatic vivacity with which those vigorous writers have been able to diversify and elevate their subject."—xv. 236, April, 1816.

After the reader has finished Ockley's History, he should take up Washington Irving's Mahomet and his Successors, last ed., N. York, 1854, 2 vols. 12mo; Muir's Life of Mahomet, Lon., 1858, 2 vols. 8vo, (see p. 1384, ante;) and Edward A. Freeman's History and Conquests of the Saracens, 1856: see Lon. Gent. "An hexameter poem, versified from the Chronicles, in a tame strain, not exceedingly bad, but still farther from good."—Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, ii. 148.

"The object of this book, which is written in Latin verse, is to panegyrise the characters and government of Elizabeth and her ministers, and it was therefore enjoined by authority to be read as a classic in every grammar-school and to be indelibly impressed upon the memory of every young scholar in the kingdom.—'a matchless contrivance,' remarks Bishop Hurd, 'to imprint a sense of loyalty on the minds of the people.'"—Drake's Shaksp. and his Times, i. 26.

But the order of the Privy Council assigns as a reason for the exclusive edict

"the remouing of such lasciuious poets as are commonly reade and taught in the same grammar-schooles."

O'Connell, Daniel, M.P., Aug. 6, 1775–May 15, 1847, a native of county Kerry, Ireland, known as The Great Irish Agitator, belongs rather to political than to literary history, and caused others to publish much more than he ever gave to the world himself; but his Memoirs on Ireland, 12mo; Memoir on Ireland, Native and Saxon, 1172–1680, 1843, 8vo, 2d ed., 1846, fp. 8vo; his Letter to Lord Shrewsbury, 1842, 8vo; and his speeches and political tracts, will justify us in giving him a place in this volume. O'Conor, Charles, D.D., a learned and excellent Irish Roman Catholic divine, for many years chaplain to the Marchioness of Buckingham and Librarian to the Duke of Buckingham at Stowe, d. 1828, aged about 67, at Belanagare, the seat of his brother, the O'Conor Don. 1. "Undoubtedly a collection of materials in the highest degree precious for the information they supply with regard to the history both of Ireland and other early British kingdoms."—Pictorial History of England.

"The publication by Dr. O'Conor of the Irish Chronicles in their original language, accompanied by a Latin translation and explanatory notes, has for the first time put the world in possession of the means of judging for itself of the truth and value of documents which had before only been known through reports of modern Irish writers, conveyed in all the vagueness of allusion and mist of paraphrase."—Moore's Ireland, vol. i., (Lardner's Cyclopædia.)

"Whether we consider the learning of O'Conor, the value of the materials, or the princely munificence of the Duke of Buckingham, at whose expense it was produced, it is without a parallel in modern literature."—SIR F. PALGRAVE: Rise of the English Commonwealth.

Yet Dr. O'Conor's editorial labours have not stood the test of minute criticism:

"It begins to be acknowledged that this work, honourable to the editor and to the family of his patrons, was thrown into his hands more by circumstances than by his peculiar competency to perform it,—though he certainly excelled in his own particular line and department, the knowledge of books and manuscripts."—Lon. Quar. Rev., July, 1856.

And see O'DONOVAN, JOHN, LL.D., No. 2, for Dr. O'Donovan's strictures upon Dr. O'Conor's edition of The Four Masters.

See also Martin's Cat. of Privately-Printed Books, 1854, 216–219; Stowe Lib. Cat., No. 3847. 26 copies were taken off on large paper; a copy was recently priced £42; and of the small paper, £25. Now (1858) worth perhaps about £18 per copy, in good binding. Nearly the whole impression of the work was distributed as presents to public and private libraries. The volumes contain no article ever before printed. The originals—the Annals of Tighearnach O'Brian, the Annals of Ulster, (imperfectly printed before by Johnstone,) The Annals of the Four Masters (perfectly printed afterwards by O'Donovan,) and other valuable Chronicles, &c.—were almost all in the library at Stowe, of the manuscript treasures of which an account was pub. by O'Conor under the title of (5) Bibliotheca MSS. Stowensis: A Descriptive Catalogue of the Manuscripts in the Stowe Library, with Appendix, 1818–19, 2 vols. in 3, 4to. 100 or 200 copies privately printed by the Duke of Buckingham. This work should accompany No. 4, as the Dissertation in the latter continually refers to it. Copies of the catalogue have sold at public sales for twenty guineas and upwards. Now (1858) worth perhaps £6. This valuable collection of MSS. was bought in one lot by the Earl of Ashburnham for £8000. 6. O'Donovan, John, LL.D., barrister-at-law, a learned member of the Irish Archæological Society, has made numerous and important contributions to Irish history, topography, and antiquities. 1. Grammar of the Irish Language, Lon., 1845, 8vo. See No. 2. 2. The Annals of Ireland, by the Four Masters, from the Earliest Historic Period to A.D. 1616; consisting of the Irish Text from the Original MS., and an English Translation, with Copious Explanatory Notes and an Index of Names, Places, and Events, Dubl., 1848–51, 3 vols. 4to, £14 14*s.*; 20 copies on large, thick vellum paper, 7 vols. r. 4to, £21; 2d ed., 1856, 7 vols. 4to, £4 4*s.* As before noticed, (p. 1448, ante,) Dr. Charles O'Conor printed the first part of the above annals in vol. iv. (the last, 1826) of the Rerum Hibernicarum Scriptores Veteres Buckinghamiæ. We have seen that the editor's labours have not escaped criticism; and, as regards his edition of the Annals of the Four Masters,

"His text is full of errors: it is printed in the Italic character, and the contractions of the manuscript, which in many places Dr. O'Conor evidently misunderstood, are allowed to remain, although without any attempt to represent them by a peculiar type. There are also many serious errors and defects in his Latin translation, arising partly from the cause just alluded to, but chiefly from ignorance of Irish topography and geography."—Dr. O'Donovan: Pref. to Annals, vol. i., ed. 1856.

Dr. O'Donovan's knowledge of Irish topography is not to be questioned; for, as he assures us in the advertisement of his Irish Grammar, he has "at various times visited every county in Ireland." On the value of the Annals of the Four Masters (three O'Clerys,—Tiege of the Mountain, or Brother Michael, Cucogrine or Peregrine, and Conary,—and Cucogry or Peregrine O'Duigenan,—O'Mulconry) it is hardly necessary to enlarge. Jacob Grimm, Dr. Petrie, Prof. Eugene Curry, Guizot, Hallam, Lord Talbot de Malahide, and other historical critics have said enough on this head to render any addition superfluous. This great work was commenced Jan. 22, 1632, and completed August 18, 1636. There appear to have been four transcripts, all of which, in whole or in part, are still extant and have been carefully collated by Dr. O'Donovan.

"For this complete edition in Erse and English—extending as it does from the Deluge to the Year of our Lord 1616—we are indebted to the man who of all others was best qualified, if not alone equal, to the undertaking."—Lon. Quar. Rev., July, 1853.

In this article will be found a most complimentary notice of Dr. O'Donovan's labours as an Irish grammarian, and as the editor of and commentator on the Tribes and Customs of the Hy-many, of those of the Hy-Fiachrach, and of the Battle of Moira, &c.

Those who wish a less expensive (we said not a cheaper) copy of the Annals of the Four Masters can procure the version made by Professor O'Connellan, with copious annotations by Dr. MacDermott, 1846, r. 4to, £2 2*s.* This translation can now be had for about a guinea, and O'Donovan's translation for about three guineas.

Ogden, John Cosens, a native of New Jersey, d. at Chestertown, Maryland, 1800, Rector of the Prot. Epis. Church at Portsmouth, N.H., 1786–93. 1. Election Serm., 1790. 2. Masonic Serm. 3. Address. 4. Letters. 5. An Excursion into Bethlehem and Nazareth in Pennsylvania in the Year 1799, with a Succinct Hist. of the Society of United Brethren, commonly called Moravians, Phila., 1800, 12mo, pp. 167; 2d ed., 1805, 12mo. Mr. John Jordan, Jr., a zealous antiquary of Philadelphia, and member of the Historical Society of Pennsylvania, has contributed largely to a number of the printed archives of the United Brethren; and we trust that he will not withhold the results of his further investigations from the world. See REICHEL, REV. LEVIN T.; REICHEL, WILLIAM C.; RITTER, ABRAHAM.

Ogden, Samuel, D.D., 1716–1778, a native of Manchester, educated at King's College, Cambridge, and St. John's, of which last he became Fellow in 1739; Master of the School at Halifax, 1744–53; Vicar of Damesham, Wiltshire; Woodwardian Professor at Cambridge, 1764; Rector of Lawford, Essex, and Stansfield, Suffolk, 1766. He pub. a number of sermons, 1758–77, and after his death appeared two vols. of his Serms. on Prayer, the Christian Faith, the Ten Commandments, &c., with Life, &c. by Bishop S. Hallifax, 1780, 2 vols. sm. 8vo; 5th ed., 1814, 8vo.

"BOSWELL. 'I like Ogden's Sermons on Prayer very much, both for neatness of style and subtilty of reason.' JOHNSON. 'I should like to read all that Ogden has written.' He [Johnson] praised my favourite preacher, his elegant language and remarkable acuteness, and said he fought infidels with their own weapons."—Boswell's Johnson, ed. 1848, r. 8vo, 386, 579. "They exhibit a complete system of all that is necessary to believe and do, in a way that is calculated at once to inform the understanding and to reach the heart."—BP. HALLIFAX.

"Like Cicero, he wants nothing to complete his meaning; like Demosthenes, he can suffer no deduction without essential injury to the sentence."—GILBERT WAKEFIELD: Life, i. 96.

"A system of Christian ethics based on pure principles," &c.—T. S. HUGHES.

"Terse and forcible, but deficient in evangelical statement."—Bickersteth's C. S.

Ogg, George. Admonition; a Poem, 1807, 8vo.

Ogilby, or Ogilvy, John, 1600–1676, a native of Edinburgh or its vicinity, resided for many years in London, and there pub. a number of works, some of them—Homer, Virgil, Montanus, &c.—translations of his own. He was noted for the splendid illustrations by Hollar, &c. which adorned several of his publications,—the Iliad, Odyssey, Virgil's Works, America, &c. We give the dates of some of these. 1. Virgil, in English, 1649–50, 8vo; 1654, r. fol. In Latin, 1658, r. fol.; 1663, r. fol. 2. Homer's Iliad, in English verse, 1660, fol. 3. Homer's Odyssey, in English, 1665, fol.; 1669, fol. In the latter part of his life Pope frequently spoke of the exquisite pleasure which the perusal of Ogilby's Homer and Sandys's Ovid gave him when a boy at school. 4. Africa, 1670, fol. 5. America: containing the Original of the Inhabitants and the Remarkable Voyages thither, 1670, fol.; 1671, fol.; 1673, fol. This work, which the collector of American books must secure, contains 57 folding plates and maps, exclusive of a much greater number inserted in the text, among which is "the earliest view" (so called) of Nieu Amsterdam (New York). It is quite in the De Bry style. 6. Atlas Japanensis, 1670, fol.; 1671, fol.; 1673, fol. 7. Atlas Chinensis, 1671–73, 2 vols. fol. 8. Asia, 1673, 2 vols. fol. 9. Ogilvie, John, D.D., 1733–1814, minister of Midmar, Aberdeenshire, from 1759 until his death, pub. The Day of Judgment, 1758; a number of other poems; and some philosophical and theological treatises. A collection of his Poems on Several Subjects was pub., Lon., 1769, 2 vols. 8vo. Johnson and Churchill did not admire his poetry; but Boswell did. See Boswell's Johnson, 1848, r. 8vo, 143, 144; Chambers and Thomson's Biog. Dict. of Eminent Scotsmen, 1855, iv. 85.

Ogilvie, John, LL.D., of Aberdeen. English Dictionary, Technological and Scientific; adapted to the Present State of Literature, Science, and Art, on the Basis of Webster's English Dictionary; with the addition of Many Thousand Words and Phrases from the other Standard Dictionaries, and from Encyclopedias, and from Numerous other Sources. Comprising all words purely English, and the Principal and most Generally Used Technical and Scientific Terms; together with their Etymologies and their Pronunciation, according to the Best Authorities. Illustrated by above Two Thousand Engravings on Wood, Glasg., Edin., and Lon., 1850, 2 vols. imp. 8vo, pp. 2384, £4 10*s.*; again, 1854, 2 vols. imp. 8vo. Supp., 1855, pp. 502, 350 engravings, £1.

"This work, containing 'all the words in Todd's Johnson and Webster's Dictionaries, and many thousand words and terms in modern use, not included in any former English Dictionary,' cost the editor more than 'ten years of unremitting toil and research.'" See Preface.

It is a splendid specimen of typography, engraving, and paper.

"We must in honesty say that Dr. Ogilvie has not only produced the best English Dictionary that exists, but, so far as the actual state of knowledge permitted, has made some approach towards perfection."—Brit. Quar. Rev.

O'Keefe, John, 1747–1833, a native of Dublin, commenced writing plays at the age of sixteen, and practised dramatic composition with such rapidity that the Biographia Dramatica enumerates nearly fifty of his plays produced before the end of the century. A collection of his Dramatic Works, in 4 vols. 8vo, was pub. in 1798; his Recollections of his Life appeared in 1826, 2 vols. 8vo; and a small volume of his poems, with autobiographical reminiscences, entitled O'Keefe's Legacy to his Daughters, was pub. in 1834, 12mo. Of his plays, Tony Lumpkin in Town, The Agreeable Surprise, Wild Oats, Modern Antiques, Fountainbleau, The Highland Reed, Love in a Camp, The Poor Soldier, and Sprigs of Laurel, still keep their place on the stage. O'Keefe became blind in his fiftieth year. A review of his Recollections will be found in the London Monthly Review, Nov. 1826, 343–352.

Oldenburg, Henry, 1626–1678, a native of Lower Saxony, and a descendant of the Counts of Oldenburg, came to England in 1653, became a Secretary of the Royal Society, and long maintained an extensive correspondence with learned men in different parts of the world. The most remarkable characteristic we can find concerning this philosopher is his habit of answering letters the moment he had read them,—almost the only instance, besides our own, which ever came to our knowledge. By this admirable method Oldenburg managed to keep up a learned correspondence with more than seventy savants. He pub. three translations on Solids, 1671, 8vo; Book of Revelations, &c., 1671, 8vo; Life of the Duchess of Mazarine, 8vo; and contributed a number of medical papers to Phil. Trans., 1665–75, and edited the Phil. Trans., No. 1, March 6, 1664, to No. 136, June 25, 1677. See Genl. Dict.; Athen. Oxon.; Martin's Biog. Phil.; Ward's Gresham Professors. As editor of Phil. Trans., Oldenburg was succeeded by Grew, and Grew by Hooke.

Oldham, John, 1653–1683, a native of Shipton, Gloucestershire, attracted great attention from parties in power by his Four Satires upon the Jesuits, and seems to have been on the eve of good fortune when he was carried off by the smallpox whilst on a visit to the Earl of Kingston at Holme Pierpont. 1. "These satires form a very curious work, and contain an immense number of stories and allusions to the Golden Legend," &c. —Disraeli.

"Oldham is a very indelicate writer: he has strong rage, but it is too much like Billingsgate. Lord Rochester had much more delicacy and more knowledge of mankind."—Pope: Spence's Anecdotes, ed. 1820, fol. 19. See also 136.

"We read with nothing but disgust the satirical poetry of Cleveland, Butler, Oldham, and Marvell. . . . Marvell wrote sometimes with more taste and feeling than was usual; but his satires are gross and stupid. Oldham—far superior in this respect—ranks perhaps next to Dryden: he is spirited and pointed; but his versification is too negligent and his subjects temporary."—*Hallam's Lit. Oldmixon, John, 1673–1742, a native of Somersetshire, Collector of the Customs at Bridgewater, pub. a number of poems and some historical works, &c. Of these the best-known is: 1. The British Empire in America, Lon., 1708, 2 vols. 8vo; 2d ed., 1741, 2 vols. 8vo; vol. i., Colonies on the Continent of N. America; vol. ii., West India Islands, &c. 2. Memoirs of the Press, Historical and Political, for Thirty Years, 1742, 8vo. Oldmixon's historical works are dull, and his bigoted defence of Whig principles and abuse of the Stuarts are not calculated to inspire confidence. The Edinburgh Review styles him

"an historical writer of moderate talent, whose works are not without useful information."

Lord Macaulay, referring to a passage in his History of England, remarks,

"Oldmixon's assertion, unsupported by evidence, is of no weight whatever."—Hist. of England, vol. iii., 1855, chap. xi.

"Oldmixon and Catherine Macaulay have, to say the least, been more distinguished by zeal than either by candour or by skill."—Lord Macaulay's Essays, 1854, i. 30.

"Oldmixon, who was a Whig historian,—if a violent party-writer ought ever to be dignified by so venerable a title,—unmercifully rigid to all other historians, was himself guilty of the crimes with which he so loudly accused others."—Disraeli's Calumities of Authors, ed., 1840, 52, n., q. v. relative to Oldmixon's treatment of Clarendon, Kennett, and Daniel.

In his Prose Essay on Criticism, and his Arts of Logic and Rhetoric, (altered from Dominick Bouhours,) Oldmixon takes Pope, Swift, Grey, and other celebrities to task in no gentle terms. Pope pays his compliments to Oldmixon in the Dunciad. See Cibber's Lives; Chalmers's Biog. Dict.; Biog. Dramat.; Swift's Works; Pope's Works; Lysons's Environs, vol. ii.; Lowndes's Bibl. Oldys, Francis, of the University of Pennsylvania. The Life of Thomas Paine, Lon., 1791–92, 8vo. Francis Oldys is a fictitious name: this book was written by George Chalmers, at that period one of the Clerks of the Board of Plantations.

"This work, though written with some ability, is filled with falsehoods which detect themselves and which consequently need no refutation."—Pref. to Sherwin's Life of Paine, 1819.

It is to be remembered that Sherwin was a warm admirer of Paine,—which is more than can be said for "Francis Oldys."

Oldys, Valentine, M.D., d. 1685, aged 65. Poem on the Restoration of K. Charles, 1660, fol.

Oldys, William, 1696–1761, Librarian to Robert Harley, Earl of Oxford, (see p. 786, ante,) and Norroy King-of-Arms, was equally noted for his love of "old books" and regard for "old wine," or rather strong ale. "Old friends" he too often disgusted by his deep potations: e.g. at the funeral of the Princess Caroline. He made large literary collections, and aided any who asked his assistance in their books, but pub. little himself. He is best known by: 1. The British Librarian: Exhibiting a Compendious Review or Abstract of our Most Scarce, Useful, and Valuable Books in all Sciences, as well in Manuscript as in Print, Lon., 1738, 8vo, pp. 402: anon.

"The reader is informed that the British Librarian is a work of no common occurrence or mean value. It is rigidly correct, if not very learned."—Dr. Dibdin.

"Though long neglected, it is now valued as a work of much accuracy and utility."—Watt's Bibl. Brit., 1824.

2. A Life of Sir Walter Raleigh; prefixed to his Hist. of the World, 1738, fol. Pub. separately, 1740, 8vo. Reprinted (together with Birch's Life of Raleigh) in the Works of Raleigh, Oxf., 1829, 8 vols. 8vo.

"A work richly inlaid with the most curious facts and the juxtaposition of the most remote knowledge. To judge by its fulness of narrative, it would seem rather to have been the work of a contemporary."—Disraeli's Curiosities of Lit., ed. 1851, 557.

"Oldys, dull as he is, is far more fair and rational than most of his successors."—N. Brit. Rev., May, 1855: Sir Walter Raleigh and his Times, q. v.

Gibbon condemns Oldys's work, (infra.)

Among Oldys's other literary labours were several lives in the General Dictionary, (Bayle's, Birch's, &c.,) 1734–41, 7 vols. fol.; contributions to Mrs. Cooper's Muses' Library, 1737, &c.; Introduction to Hayward's British Muse, 1738; several lives in the Biographia Britannica, 1747–66, 10 vols. fol.; and the Song "Busy, Curious, Thirsty Fly." Among the valuable MSS. left by him was one with the captivating title Of London Libraries; with Anecdotes of Collectors of Books, Remarks on Booksellers and on the First Publishers of Catalogues. See an account of these MSS. and of their former possessor in Disraeli's Curiosities of Literature, ed. 1851, 554–562; see also Disraeli's Quarrels of Authors, ed. 1840, 213, 284; Sir S. E. "A man of eager curiosity and indefatigable diligence, who first exerted that spirit of inquiry into the literature of the old English writers by which the works of our great dramatic poet have of late been so signally illustrated."—Boswell, in his Life of Johnson, ed. 1848, r. 8vo, 53.

"Oldys yielded up his entire days to researches concerning the books and the men of the preceding age. . . . His literary curiosity anticipated by half a century the fervour of the present day."—Disraeli's Curiosities of Lit., 556.

"Well versed in English antiquities, a correct writer, and a good historian."—Sir S. E. Brydges: Pref. to his ed. of Phillips's Theat. Poet. Anglic., lxvii.

"Nothing, I firmly believe, would ever have biassed him to insert any fact in his writings he did not believe, or to suppress any he did. Of this delicacy he gave an instance at a time when he was in great distress. After his publication of the life of Sir Walter Raleigh, some booksellers, thinking his name would sell a piece they were publishing, offered him a considerable sum to father it, which he rejected with the greatest indignation."—Capt. Grose's Olio.

O'Leary, Arthur, d. 1802, at an advanced age, an eminent Roman Catholic divine, a native of Cork, and educated at St. Malo, officiated at York and afterwards in London. He pub. a number of controversial tracts, sermons, essays, addresses, &c., 1780–99. A collection of some of these, under the title Miscellaneous Tracts, Theological and Political, was pub. 1780–81, 2 vols. 8vo; 3d ed., 1782, 8vo; again, 1791, 8vo; N. York, 1821, 8vo. He also pub. in 1788, 8vo, A Defence of the Conduct and Writings of the Rev. Arthur O'Leary, in answer to Dr. Woodward, Bp. of Cloyne. See Life of Rev. Arthur O'Leary, by T. R. England, 1822, 8vo; Chalmers's Biog. Dict.; Lon. Gent. Mag., lxxii.; England, Thomas R. Two of O'Leary's opponents bear testimony to his literary merits:

"He represents matters strongly and eloquently, and, Shakspeare-like, he is well acquainted with the avenues to the human heart."—Bp. Woodward.

"An arch and lively writer."—John Wesley.

"Few have contributed more to dispel the public prejudice against the Catholics than Father O'Leary. In his writings against Dr. Woodward, the Bishop of Cloyne, and the celebrated Wesley, he displayed great powers both of argument and of ridicule. His answer to the former, who quarrelled with purgatory, 'that he might go farther and fare worse,' is generally known."—Charles Butler.

O'Leary, Charles, b. 1830, at Cork, Ireland, educated at Trinity College, Dublin, emigrated to America in 1849, and became Professor of Greek in Mount St. Mary's College, Emmetsburg. He left this institution in January, 1853, to take part in a new college just commenced at Cincinnati, Ohio. An Elementary Greek Grammar, based on the latest German edition of Kühner, N. York and Lon., 1857, 8vo. Commended. See Millard, J. H. Mr. O'Leary has pub. a number of papers in American scientific journals.

Oley, Barnabas, President of Clare Hall, Cambridge, Preb. of Worcester, and Archdeacon of Ely, d. 1686, pub. Dr. Thos. Jackson's Works and Herbert's Country Parson, and prefixed to each a Preface. His Life of Herbert is prefixed to Pickering's beautiful ed. of George Herbert's Works in Verse and Prose, 1853, 2 vols. 8vo. See Bentham's Ely; Barwick's Life; Walker's Sufferings of the Clergy.

Olin, Stephen, D.D., LL.D., 1797–1851, a native of Leicester, Vermont, a son of Judge Henry Olin, of the Supreme Court of Vermont, graduated at Middlebury College, in 1820, subsequently engaged in teaching in a seminary in South Carolina, and, whilst thus occupied, became a Methodist preacher; Professor of Belles-Lettres in Franklin College, Athens, Georgia, 1826; President of the Randolph Macon College, Virginia, and Instructor in the departments of Mental and Moral Science, Belles-Lettres, and Political Philosophy, 1832; travelled for his health, in Europe and the East, 1837–41; President of the Wesleyan University, Middletown, Connecticut, from 1842 until his death. 1. Travels in Egypt, Arabia Petræa, and the Holy Land, N. York, 1843, 2 vols. 8vo, pp. 458, 478.

"This work is rich in information, pervaded by a lofty spirit, and entitled to entire confidence."—Bp. Potter's Hand-Book for Readers and Students, 1845. 245.

"We have been happy to discover in it evidences of a kind and catholic spirit, of a bland temper, of a sober judgment, and of Christian sensibility. . . . We are compelled to believe that on some important points he is indebted to an unacknowledged use of Dr. Robertson's discoveries, arguments, and authorities. We make this statement with pain; but we should be faithless to our duty if we withheld it."—N. Amer. Rev., lvii. 491–495, Oct. 1843.

Mess., i. 15; Method. Quar. Rev., xi. 652, (Death of Dr. Olin.)

"In overmastering power in the pulpit we doubt whether, living, he had a rival, or, dying, he left his like among men. His power did not consist in any single quality,—in force of reasoning, or fire of imagination, or heat of declamation,—but in all combined."—Method. Quar. Rev.

Dr. Wightman, of South Carolina, was completely carried away by Dr. Olin's pulpit-eloquence, and has recorded his admiration in terms the most enthusiastic which the language affords.

Oliver, Peter, (alias William Pynchon Oliver,) of the Suffolk Bar, Massachusetts, 1821–1855, a descendant of Thomas Oliver, first ruling elder of the First Church of Boston, 1832, and of Lieutenant-Governor Oliver, and son of Daniel Oliver, M.D., LL.D., (ante,) was a native of Hanover, New Hampshire, was educated for the law, and edited the 4th ed. of his uncle B. L. Oliver's Practical Conveyancing, (ante.) He died whilst on a voyage for his health. He contributed a number of articles to the (New York) Church Review, and left in MS. The Puritan Commonwealth: An Historical Review of the Puritan Government in Massachusetts, in its Civil and Ecclesiastical Relations, from its Rise to the Abrogation of the First Charter; together with some General Reflections on the English Colonial Policy and on the Character of Puritanism, Bost., 1856, 8vo, pp. 502. Edited by Fitch Edward Oliver, the brother of the author. A review of this work, written by the Rev. George E. Ellis, of Charlestown, Mass., will be found in the North American Review, April, 1857, 426–469. We extract a few paragraphs:

"This book is designed to tell 'the other side of the story' of the fathers of Massachusetts. It contains an unfavourable, an unfriendly, an excessively severe, disquisition upon their policy. It subjects to a most unsparing freedom of criticism their motives, principles, and conduct, as well as their peculiar institutions in church and state. . . . He has made a most diligent and exhaustive use of the original sources of information on all matters pertaining to our history. A world of labour must he have spent in his task. . . . Mr. Oliver has a way of quoting a part when the whole would not serve him. He is also apt to add glosses of his own. . . . Mr. Oliver utterly misconstrues the Puritans, from the beginning to the end of his elaborate and most richly-wrought essay. He starts with a bias which perverts his judgment. . . . The book is written in a style of unsurpassed beauty. It has every grace of facile and attractive composition. Uniformly correct and chaste in diction, pointed and terse in its emphatic passages, exact and chastened in its rhetoric, it occasionally presents sentences and paragraphs in which the cast of the language and the fitness of the imagery compel our admiration."—426, 432, 433, 437.

The Puritan Commonwealth was also reviewed by Mr. J. Wingate Thornton, in the Boston Transcript, in seventeen articles, pub. Dec. 20th, 1856, Jan. 2d, 8th, 13th, 22d, 23d, 24th, 29th, Feb. 5th, 9th, 11th, 18th, 19th, 21st, 26th, March 4th, 19th, 25th, April 2d, 9th, 1857. These were repub. collectively, in a pamphlet entitled Peter Oliver's "Puritan Commonwealth" Reviewed, in 1857, (100 copies printed,) pp. 79. At the conclusion of the pamphlet Mr. Thornton professes to have produced "overwhelming evidence of the author's recklessness and the total unworthiness of his pages." This is a matter which we must refer to the judgment of the historical reader.

He was the author of Elements of Chemistry, New Haven, 1851, 12mo, and of a paper on the Whirlwinds produced by the burning of a Cane-Brake, pub. in Trans. Amer. Assoc. for the Advancement of Science, in 1850.

Olmsted, Denison, LL.D., b. at East Hartford, Conn., June 18, 1791; graduated at Yale College, 1813; tutor in the same institution, 1815–17; Prof. of Chemistry in the University of North Carolina, 1817–25; Prof. of Mathematics in Yale College, 1825–36; and from that date until the present (1858) Prof. of Natural Philosophy and Astronomy in the same institution. Professor Olmsted has given to the world: 1. Report on the Geology of North Carolina, 1825, 8vo. 2. Oration on the Progressive State of the Present Age, 1827. 3. "A new and excellent likeness" of Professor Olmsted, with a biographical notice, will be found in the Yale Literary Magazine for May, 1858. This portrait, engraved by Ritchie from a daguerreotype by Moulthrop, forms one of a series just published by Thomas H. Pease, which includes also portraits of President Woolsey and Professors Goodrich, Porter, Thacher, and Dana. A likeness of Olmsted, engraved by Hinman from a painting by Jocelyn, (in the Trumbull Gallery,) appeared in the Yale Literary Magazine for Aug. 1844. See also, with reference to Professor Olmsted, Lon. Quarterly Review, Jan. 1853: Meteors, Aerolites, Shooting Stars. This most useful public benefactor has personally taken part in the education of over three thousand pupils, whilst through his excellent text-books he has reached a far greater number of minds in various parts of the world.

Olmsted, Francis Allyn, M.D., 1819–1844, eldest son of the preceding, a native of Chapel Hill, North Carolina, after graduating at Yale College, in 1839 made a voyage to the Sandwich Islands for the benefit of his health. On his return in 1841, he pub. an account of his adventures in a vol. entitled Incidents of a Whaling Voyage, N. York, 1841, 12mo. Illustrated. This work had a rapid sale. The author died at New Haven, where his father has so long usefully laboured in the cause of education. See Kent's Course of Eng. Read., Oakley's ed., 1853, 77.

Olmsted, Frederick Law, b. 1821, at Hartford, Conn., a resident of New York since 1848, and in 1858 appointed Architect-in-Chief and Superintendent of the Central Park in that city, has travelled extensively in the East Indies, Europe, and America, and given the results of his observations in the three following very popular volumes. 1. Walks and Talks of an American Farmer in England, N. York, 1852, 12mo; 2d ed., 1857, 12mo.

"The American Farmer is a very clever and observing fellow."—Lon. Athenæum.

"He is, on the whole, we think, one of the best observers from the new country who has yet visited the old, and knows how to appreciate it."—Lon. Economist.

"An unpretending and delightful narrative."—Southern Literary Messenger.

A Journey in Texas; or, A Saddle Trip on the South-Western Frontier; with a Statistical Appendix, 1856, 12mo.

"It is a clear and satisfactory demonstration of the practical evils of the slave-institution, economical, moral, and social. . . . It has all the qualities of an interesting journal of travel."—N. Amer. Rev., lxxxiv. 565.

"We may rejoice that Mr. Olmsted followed this course, [travelling for the benefit of his health.] He recovered his health and has produced an exceedingly amusing book."—Lon. Athen., 1857, 399.

Also commended by the Lon. Examiner, (copied into Bost. Liv. Age, liii. 212.)

4. The Englishman in Kansas, by T. H. Gladstone; edited by F. L. Olmsted, 1857, 12mo.

O'Meara, Barry Edward, M.D., 1778–1836, a native of Ireland, educated at Trinity College, Dublin, and at the Royal College of Surgeons, served in capacity of surgeon both in the Royal Army and Royal Navy, and, attracting the attention and regard of Napoleon, who found him on board the Bellerophon, he was induced to accompany the latter to St. Helena. Notwithstanding the approbation which his conduct elicited from Sir George Cockburn, Sir Pulteney Malcolm, (custodians of Napoleon,) and Lord Melville, he differed so widely in opinion with Sir Hudson Lowe that he resigned his post in July, 1818, returned to England, preferred charges against Sir H. Lowe, and was dismissed from the naval service November 2, 1818. The alleged cause of this degradation will be found in John Wilson Croker's letter to O'Meara (dated as above) apprizing him of his removal. See Blackwood's Magazine, xii. 704. The whole story will be found detailed at length in O'Meara's publications and in the other authorities to which we are about to refer the reader. After his dismissal O'Meara became quite a lion; and his fame was extended by the eulogy of Lord Byron:

"The stiff surgeon who maintained his cause
Hath lost his place and gain'd the world's applause."
The Age of Bronze.

After O'Meara's return to his native land, he distinguished himself as an active partisan of the political measures so vigorously promoted by Daniel O'Connell. 1. Manuscript de L'Ile d'Elbe by Napoleon. 2. Letters from the Cape of Good Hope. 3. Letters from St. Helena. 4. Letters from Count Las Casas; with a Preliminary Discourse. 5. A Translation of the Memoirs of Napoleon, by himself. 6. An Exposition of some of the Transactions that have taken place at St. Helena since the Appointment of Sir Hudson Lowe: in Answer to an Anonymous Pamphlet entitled "Facts Illustrative of the Treatment of Napoleon Buonaparte," &c.; 2d ed., 1819, 8vo, pp. 223. The "anonymous pamphlet" (vindicatory of Sir Hudson Lowe) to which O'Meara responds in the above work is criticized with great severity in the Edinburgh Review, xxxii. 148–170, whilst O'Meara is commended in the highest terms. 7. Napoleon in Exile, or A Voice from St. Helena: The Opinions and Reflections of Napoleon on the Most Important Events of his Life and Government, in his own Words, 1822, 2 vols. 8vo. This work was sold with great rapidity: at least five eds. were called for; and several eds. have been pub. in America. The critics, as usual, were divided: the Edinburgh Reviewers defended it vigorously; the London Quarterly (in the person of John Wilson Croker) and Blackwood's Magazine (speaking through Christopher North) assailed it furiously. No wonder that it sold well.

"All I can say is," says Blackwood, in the Noctes Ambrosianæ for December, 1822, "the more the book is abused the better it sells. I think there is never an hour but I hear it called for. It has had as great a run as the Cook's Oracle ever had."

Again:

"NORTH. 'Don't read it. Hogg. It's a piece of mere trash.'
"HOGG. 'Od! I thought I saw some commendations o't in the Magazine.' [See vol. xii. 358.]
"NORTH. 'Yes; but Mr. Croker's letter of 1818 had not been published then: at least, I had not seen it: else I would have scored out the paragraph.'"—Noctes Ambros., Sept. 1822.

See also Noctes Ambros., March, 1823; and Blackw. Mag., xiv. 172.

Mr. Croker's review of Napoleon's Exile will be found in the Lon. Quarterly for October, 1822, xxviii. 219–264, and the vindication of the book and its author in the Edinburgh Review, just referred to, appeared in the No. for June, 1822, xxxvii. 164–204. In the same periodical for May, 1823, (review of the works of Viscount Ebrington and Count Las Casas on Napoleon,) it is affirmed that "Mr. O'Meara's work contained a body of the most interesting and valuable information,—information the accuracy of which stands unimpeached by any of the attacks lately made against its author. . . . The details in the count's work and those of Mr. O'Meara mutually support each other."—xxxviii. 494, 499.

Another critic, and one of some importance, occupies in this controversy a middle ground between the two just noted:

"Extremely interesting, though written by a person on whom, by his own shewing one cannot place much reliance. But he could not have invented Buonaparte's conversations; and, with all allowance for exaggeration and party-spirit and private malice, it is a grievous tale. The despot of Europe reduced to such a narrow theatre of petty squabbles is piteous. Such a choice of a governor over such a prisoner was unfortunate, to say the least of it. The most high-born good breeding, the most refined good nature, could hardly have sufficed in such a situation."—Portfolio of a Man of the World, Oct. 22, 1822: Lon. Gent. Mag., Dec. 1846, 564.

It is but fair in this connexion (for we do not profess to belong to either party in any of these controversies) to refer the reader to the Letters and Journals of Sir Hudson Lowe, 1853, 3 vols. 8vo, noticed on p. 1136, ante. This vexata quæstio, however, can hardly be satisfactorily disposed until the publication of another journal kept by O'Meara at St. Helena, and left by him to his friend Mr. Mailliard, now of Bordentown, New Jersey, late private secretary to Joseph Buonaparte. This MS. contains much valuable matter still unknown to the world and calculated to deeply interest all students of political history. Of Napoleon's confidence in the veracity of his favourite medical attendant we have the most unequivocal testimony:

"Je prie mes parens et mes amis de croire tout ce que le Docteur O'Meara leur dira relativement à la position où je me trouve et aux sentimens que je conserve. S'il voit ma bonne Louise, je la prie de permettre qu'il lui baise la main. NAPOLEON.
"Le 25 Juillet, 1818."

In addition to the authorities already cited, refer to Lon. Gent. Mag., Aug. 1836, 219, Oct. 1836, 434, April, 1854, 368. At the sale of O'Meara's effects, (he died at his residence on the Edgeware Road,) which occurred on the 18th and 19th of July, 1836, a few lines in Napoleon's handwriting sold for eleven guineas; a lock of his hair, for £2 10*s.*; one of his teeth, extracted by O'Meara, for seven guineas and a half; and the instrument with which it was extracted, for three guineas.

Opie, Amelia, 1769–1853, the daughter and only child of James Alderson, M.D., of Norwich, of which city she was a native, lost her mother in 1784, and, succeeding to her place as entertainer of the doctor's literary and musical guests, was early introduced to the society of which she was destined to become so distinguished an ornament. Her taste for letters thus stimulated by example, she soon ventured to contribute prose and poetical compositions to the columns of the (Norwich) Cabinet, the London Magazine, and other periodicals of less pretensions; and she even went so far as to publish anonymously a novel, bearing the excellent title of The Dangers of Coquetry. This moral production may have done much good, but certainly attracted little notice and perhaps less applause. In 1798 she married John Opie, the painter, and, on his death in 1807, returned to Norwich, where she remained unmarried for the rest of her life. In 1825 she renounced the Unitarian tenets in which she had been educated, and became a member of the Society of Friends,—adopting the garb, though not all the peculiar opinions, of that religious community. In all the relations of life she was truly amiable, and did not confine her benevolence of disposition to her immediate circle of friends. In his Colloquies on Society, (1829, 2 vols. 8vo,) Southey instances (without naming them) Mrs. Fry and Mrs. Opie as women prepared by charitable enthusiasm to take the lead in establishing societies for improving hospitals, &c.; and, in a letter written shortly afterwards to Mrs. Opie, the author remarks,

"When I designated you so plainly in that Colloquy, I wrote under the influence of strong feelings; but I have ever since been calmly convinced that I neither spoke too strongly nor said too much. Amelia Opie, I know no person so qualified, and let me say, so prepared, as you to take the lead in a great work of goodness; and, if you are of one mind with me in this, I verily believe that it will be done."—Keswick, Aug. 30, 1829.

See this letter, and two letters of Mrs. Opie's to Southey (6th mo. 8th, and 11th mo. 24th, 1829) on the same subject, in Southey's Life and Correspondence, chap. xxxii.

"We shall ever regard her life," says her biographer in the Gentleman's Magazine, "as one of the healthiest and happiest we have known, and consider it as one of our blessings that a portion of our own has been brightened by the friendly regard of Amelia Opie."—Jan. 1854, 97. See also 213.

"Mrs. Opie's liveliness of character and goodness of heart," remarks another writer, "seem never to have dimmed—never to have been chilled—to the last hour of her life. In this she showed herself serene, considerate, and affectionate."—Lon. Athen., June 17, 1854, 745.

"Mrs. Opie's nature," says her friend of nearly thirty years,—Mrs. S. C. Hall,—"was most essentially feminine. It was feminine in its gifts, in its graces, in its strength, in its weakness, in its generosity. . . . The sensitive delicacy of her mind was evident not only in her writings, but in her words and deportment; and it was impossible for the young to have a better guide or a more excellent example. Her manners would have graced a court and not encumbered a cottage."—Memoirs of Amelia Opie, in Lon. Art Journal.

An eloquent tribute to the worth of this excellent woman, written as early as 1807, by Mrs. John Taylor, of Norwich, (the friend of Sir James Mackintosh, Dr. Parr, and Basil Montagu,) will be found in the (Norwich) Cabinet or Monthly Report of Polite Literature, vol. i. 217, 1807.

Reviews of this vol. will be found in Lon. Gent. Mag., June, 1854, 581–590; Lon. Athen., June 10, 1854, 707–709, 743–745. See also Miss Sedgwick's Letters from Abroad, 1841.

This review is—incorrectly, we think—ascribed by Moir (Sketches of the Poet. Lit. of the Past Half-Century, 37) to Lord Jeffrey.

"Seldom have we met with any combination of incidents, real or imaginary, which possessed more of the deeply pathetic. The moral inculcated by this tale is seriously impressive."—Crit. Rev.

"The gifted man [Sir Walter Scott, at a dinner at Sir George Phillips's] condescended to speak to me of my 'Father and Daughter,' and told me he had cried over it more than he ever cried over such things."—MRS. OPIE: in C. L. Brightwell's Life of Opie.

The popularity of this work, of which at least ten English edits. were pub., was much increased by its being translated and dramatized: thus, converted into the opera of Agnese, Pare's music and Ambrogetti's acting and singing introduced it into many circles to whom the more humble novel would have always remained unknown.

"The poetical talents of Mrs. Opie are generally known. We will not attempt to enumerate the beauties which occur in almost every stanza of the 'Dying Daughter to her Mother.' We will not dwell upon the awful moral it conveys, but leave both to their natural and powerful effect upon the taste and feelings of the judicious reader."—Brit. Critic.

5. Adeline Mowbray, or The Mother and Daughter; a Tale, 1804, 3 vols. 12mo; 2d ed., 3 vols. 12mo; last separate ed., 1844, fp. 8vo.

"The second volume of this beautiful story is perhaps the most pathetic and the most natural in its pathos of any fictitious narrative in our language."—LORD JEFFREY: Edin. Rev., viii. 465, July, 1806.

"We opened with great pleasure a new novel from the entertaining pen of Mrs. Opie, a lady whose uncommon talents do honour to her sex and country."—Crit. Rev.

"This work must be allowed to rank considerably higher than the ordinary productions of the same kind. The interest of the story is well preserved to the end. The incidents in general follow naturally from the causes assigned, and are wrought up with uncommon skill."—Lit. Jour.

"The language is simple and appropriate, the situations frequently marked and often affecting, and the characters indicate much acute observation of the human mind."—Gen. Rev.

"These volumes are, both in their design and execution, so superior to those which we usually encounter under the title of Novels, that we can safely recommend them to the perusal of our readers."—Month. Rev.

"Mrs. Opie has pathetic scenes, but the object is not attained; for the distress is not made to arise from the unnuptial union itself, but from the opinions of the world against it; so that it may as well be taken to be a satire on our prejudices in favour of marriage as on the paradoxes of sophists against it."—SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH: Life, i. chap. v.

6. Simple Tales, 1806, 4 vols. 12mo; 2d ed., 4 vols. 12mo. Other eds. Contents: Vol. I. The Black Velvet Pelisse; The Death-Bed; The Fashionable Wife and Unfashionable Husband; The Robber. II. The Mother and Son; Love and Duty. III. The Soldier's Return; The Brother and Sister; The Revenge. IV. Uncle and Nephew; Murder will Out; The Orphan.

"These tales, like Julia Beresford's Ballad, mentioned in the first story, are neither showy nor brilliant, but natural, simple, and interesting. They contain a great deal of moral instruction, and in general are worthy of the reputation which Mrs. Opie has already deservedly acquired."—Lon. Lit. Jour.

"In the tales now before us we find much of the same merits as in her beautiful story of Adeline Mowbray,—the same truth and delicacy of sentiment, the same graceful simplicity in the dialogue-parts of the work, and the same happy art of presenting ordinary feelings and occurrences in a manner that irresistibly commands our sympathy and affection."—LORD JEFFREY: Edin. Rev., July, 1808. 465.

14. Tales of the Heart, 1820, 4 vols. 12mo.

"Though some of the stories interested us, scarcely an incident, or a character, or an expression, reached the precinct of the heart. . . . We know that she has talents: and we must therefore earnestly entreat that in the next publication she will not excite a suspicion that they are impaired and blunted."—Lon. Month. Rev., August, 1820. 375–387.

15. Madeline; a Tale, 1822, 2 vols. 12mo.

"KESWICK, 11th April, 1822.

"My dear Madame:—Your Madeline is a great favourite here, and well deserves to be so. The tale is beautifully told and everywhere true to nature: if there be little of that ideal colouring which belongs to this species of composition as much as to poetry, it is in your hero rather than your heroine. The tragic catastrophe would, as you say, have made the story more perfect; but it would have made the book painful, instead of pleasing, in recollection."—Robert Southey to Mrs. Opie.

16. Illustrations of Lying in all its Branches, 1825, 2 vols. 12mo. This excellent vol. should be used as a home manual in all families. 17. Detraction Displayed, 1828. Another manual for the fireside. 18. Lays for the Dead, 1833, 12mo; 2d ed., 1840, 12mo.

"In a letter dated 2d mo. 27, 1832, she writes, 'I am engaged in preparing for the press a little volume of "Lays for the Dead," containing many pieces never printed, and some that have appeared in annuals of past years. They will be in their order from the year 1813 to the present time; and as every one has, in turn, lost some dear relative or friend, I hope that, however unable the power of the hand that touches the lyre on the occasion, some of the chords will vibrate to the hearts of some of my readers.'"

In 1844 were pub., in one vol. fp. 8vo, new eds. of: I. Adeline Mowbray; II. The Welcome Home; III. The Quaker and the Young Man of the World. In 1845–47, a collective ed. of her Miscellaneous Tales appeared in 12 vols. 18mo; viz.: I. All is not Gold that Glitters; II. Appearance is Against Her; III. Brother and Sister; IV. Father and Daughter; V. Father and Son; VI. Happy Faces; VII. Love and Duty; VIII. Mysterious Stranger; IX. Opposite Neighbour; X. Ruffian Boy; XI. Stage Coach; XII. Wife's Duty. The publication-price of these vols. was 2*s.* each; but in 1849 they were reduced to 1*s.* 6*d.* each. In addition to her numerous publications in book-form, Mrs. Opie contributed largely to the Annuals, Tait's Magazine, &c.

"We cannot," remarks a late eminent critic, "place Mrs. Opie so high in the scale of intellect as Miss Edgeworth; nor are her tales, though perfectly unobjectionable on the score of morality, calculated to do so much good. They are too fine for common use, and do not aim at the correction of errors and follies of so extensive and fundamental a nature. She does not reason so powerfully; and she is not sufficiently cheerful: indeed, she is too pathetic to be read with much advantage to practical morality. Her writings, however, are very amiable and very beautiful, and exhibit virtuous emotions under a very graceful aspect. They would do well to form a woman that a gentleman should fall in love with, but can be of no great use in training ordinary mortals to ordinary duties."—LORD JEFFREY: Edin. Rev., viii. 471: Mrs. Opie's Simple Tales.

It must be remembered that this criticism was penned as early as 1806, and that Mrs. Opie pub. many volumes after this. A critic in the same periodical, writing after the completion of Mrs. Opie's labours as an author of fictitious narratives, remarks,

"As delineations of society, her sketches were of no value: neither did she excel in drawing characters nor in making her personages act and talk as they would in real life. Her plots were not constructed with much attention to probability, and her style was too much infected with meretricious ornament. The passions were her province, and her forte lay in the exhibition of their workings. Here she was eminently successful and could interest the feelings of her readers in a powerful degree. She excelled, like Godwin, in developing the morbid anatomy of the human heart, and possessed in some respects a kindred talent,—though she cannot be said to have produced any work that is equal in force to Caleb Williams."—Edin. Rev., July, 1830, 450.

As regards her poetry,

"Some of her songs and elegiac strains," says the critic of Blackwood for March, 1837, "will outlive many compositions of the same kind now flourishing in fashionable life while hers would seem to be forgotten."—xli. 409. See also xx. 897.

The Orphan Boy and Forget Me Not may be occasionally remembered; but critics generally have not assigned a high place to Mrs. Opie the poetess.

See Moir's Sketches of the Poet. Lit. of the Past Half-Cent., 1851, 37; Southey's Life and Corresp., chap. vi.; Rowton's Female Poets of Great Britain, (1848,) 287; Bethune's Brit. Female Poets, 315. It has been truly said of her poetry that it

"bears fresh evidence to the truth that woman's moral sentiments are generally in advance of man's. Those who doubt the fact will do well to remember how continually man's verse celebrates the infernal stories of war, the cruel excitements of the chase, or the selfish pleasures of bacchanalian enjoyment, and, on the other hand, how unceasingly woman's verse exposes the wickedness and folly of such pursuits."

Opie, John, 1761–1807, a native of St. Agnes, near Truro, in Cornwall, became footboy to Dr. John Wolcot, (Peter Pindar,) who encouraged his taste for portrait-painting and brought him to London and made him the fashion. Lects. [IV.] on Painting, delivered at the Royal Academy of Arts; with Memoir of his Life by Mrs. Opie, &c., Lon., 1809, 4to.

"He is inferior in elegance to Sir Joshua Reynolds, but he is superior in strength. . . . Opie's Lectures are animated harangues, those of Sir Joshua calm and precise discourses on the principles of an art."—Sir James Mackintosh: Life, ii. chap. i.

Ordericus Vitalis, a priest of the Abbey of Ouche, Normandy, b. 1075, at Attingesham, (now Atcham,) near Shrewsbury, d. after 1143, was the author of Historia Ecclesiasticæ, lib. xiii., (in Latin,) containing the history of the Church, &c. from the birth of Christ to 1141. It was first edited by Duchesne, among his Historiæ Normannorum Scriptores Antiqui, Paris, 1619, fol. Another ed., by A. C. Orm, an Anglo-Norman poet temp. John, was the author of a Metrical Harmony of the Gospels, written in English verse without rhyme. Extracts from the Ormulum (for so he calls it) will be found in Benjamin Thorpe's Analecta Anglo-Saxonica, 1834, 8vo, pp. 171–178.

"The Ormulum deserves to be printed entire, as a most interesting and important monument of the history of our language."—Wright's Biog. Brit. Lit., Anglo-Norman Period, 436–439, q. v. for specimens.

Orme, Robert, 1728–1801, a native of Anjengo, in the Travancore country, India, a son of Dr. Alexander Orme, a physician and surgeon in the service of the East India Company, was educated at Harrow School; returned to Calcutta in 1742; held the office of Commissary and Accomptant-General during the years 1757–58; returned to England finally in 1758; settled in London as historiographer to the E. I. Company; retired to Ealing in 1792 and resided there for the rest of his life. 1. "It is impossible for me to describe the delight and admiration I have felt from the perusal of your history of the war in India. The places, circumstances, and events of it are so clearly described by you that I felt an interest in them rather as an actor than as a reader," &c.—SIR WILLIAM JONES.

"Orme, inferior to no English historian in style and power of painting, is minute even to tediousness. In one volume he allots, on an average, a closely-printed quarto page to the events of every forty-eight hours. The consequence is that his narrative, though one of the most authentic and one of the most finely written in our language, has never been very popular and is now scarcely ever read."—Lord Macaulay's Essays, 1854, ii. 445: from Edin. Rev., Jan. 1840.

A heavier domestic misfortune than the death of Ossory was in store for the family: Ossory's son James, the second Duke of Ormonde, made shipwreck of a name illustrious by the patriotic services of at least five hundred years, by leading a Spanish invading expedition (on behalf of the Pretender) against his country. See The Conduct of his Grace the Duke of Ormonde in the Campaign of 1712, 4to, 1715. But it has been urged in his defence,—and that defence should have all the weight which it can justly claim,—

Orton, Job, 1717–1783, a native of Shrewsbury, a pupil of Dr. Philip Doddridge, and in March, 1738–39, chosen his assistant in his academy at Northampton, was from 1741 to '65 pastor of a Dissenting congregation at Shrewsbury. Obliged, from the failure of his health, to resign his ministerial duties, he removed to Kidderminster in 1766, and there remained, engaged in literary labours, until his death. "This work is not very popular."—Watt's Bibl. Brit.

"This work was designed for a companion to Doddridge's Exposition of the New Testament, but falls far short of its predecessor. Bib.*

"This work was published after the author's death by Mr. Gentleman, of Kidderminster: it contains notes chiefly collected from modern expositors, of which 'it cannot be said that they are eminently critical; but they often convey valuable instruction, and the reflections are admirably adapted to promote the purposes of serious religion.' (Biographia Britannia, [by Dr. Kippis,] 2d ed., vol. v. p. 311. See also Month. Rev., O.S., vol. lxxix. p. 329.) "The present learned Bishop of Salisbury, Burgess, spoke very highly of this book to me, one day, when in conversation with him."—Goodhugh's E. G. Lib. Man., 13.

"I have just been reading with very great pleasure, and I hope some profit, Orton and Stonehouse's Letters to Stedman. They contain most excellent prudential, moral, and religious instruction,—devout, liberal, rational, yet fervent piety, of the stamp of Doddridge, who is now my prime favourite among divines. If you have not seen them, they will richly repay your perusal."—Rev. Robert Hall to Rev. J. Phillips, Feb. 14, 1801: Hall's Works, ed. 1853, v. 420.

"We have no hesitation in saying that Mr. Palmer has performed an acceptable service in compiling this collection of Letters. They may be read both with pleasure and profit by persons of all denominations, and more particularly both by Dissenting ministers and those also of the Established Church."—Crit. Rev.

See also Lowndes's Brit. Lib., 821. In 1842 appeared The Practical Works of the Rev. Job Orton, S.T.P., now first collected, consisting of Discourses, Sacramental Meditations, and Letters; with Copious Indexes; to which is prefixed a Memoir of the Author, 2 vols. 8vo.

"Job Orton is well known as the personal friend and the biographer of the celebrated Doddridge. He was a man of strong sense, of sound learning, of exemplary candour and extensive information; being remarkably well read, especially in English theology. His numerous letters are a treasure to theological students and to ministers, and his discourses, which are eminently practical, are characterised throughout by Christian simplicity and a nervous eloquence. The spirit of his Sacramental Meditations is reverent, sober, and devout."—Williams's Christian Preacher, 1843, 360.

See Lowndes's Brit. Lib., 640. We know not which of Mr. Orton's works it was that elicited the following warm commendation:

"Pray thank Mr. Orton for his book. I am charmed and edified with it. I make it my constant companion. As I read, I am delighted to find the great divine and the able controversialist concealing himself under the better character of the pious and humble Christian."—DR. TUCKER, Dean of Gloucester.

See also Biog. Brit., by Dr. Kippis, 2d ed., v. 311, note to his Life of Doddridge; NEAL, NATHANIEL.

"The Rev. Job Orton was a Dissenting minister in the middle of the last century, and had grown heavy and gouty by sitting long at dinner and at his studies. He could only get down-stairs, at last, by spreading the folio volumes of Caryl's Commentaries upon Job on the steps, and sliding down them. Surprised one day in his lescent, he exclaimed, 'You have often heard of Caryl upon Job: now you see Job upon Caryl.' The same quaint-witted gouty old gentleman seems to have been one of those 'superior happy spirits,' who slid through life on the rollers of learning, enjoying the good things of the world, and laughing at them, and turning his infirmities to a livelier account than his patriarchal namesake."—Hazlitt's Table-Talk: On Old English Writers and Speakers.

It seems a pity to spoil so good a story, but our duty as a bibliographer will not permit us to allow our readers to be so deceived. The voluminous edition of Caryl on Job, to which Mr. Hazlitt refers, is in 12 vols. small quarto, not "folio." The folio edition is in two vols. only. Now, it will not require much reflection to perceive that six feet of folios would be too short a railroad for a large man, and that eleven quartos, diversified with eleven breaks, would be too dangerous a mode of conveyance for a cautious man. Besides, if Mr. Orton was obliged to use so much ingenuity to get down-stairs before dinner, the question naturally occurs, How did he manage to get up-stairs after dinner? for Hazlitt certainly insinuates a too sedulous devotion to the pleasures of the table. But the author of Table-Talk—the title is not without significance—had no partiality for divines; and therefore his story is liable to just suspicion.

Osborn, Laughton, of the city of New York, graduated at Columbia College, 1827, has pub. several works, all without his name. 1. Sixty Years of the Life of Jeremy Levis, N. York, 1831, 2 vols. 12mo. 2. The Dream of Alla-Ad-deen, from the Romance of Anastasia, by Charles Erskine White, D.D., pp. 32. 3. The Confessions of a Poet, by Himself, Phila., 1835. On its first appearance this work was generally attributed to John Neal.

"Osborn's Sixty Years of the Life of Jeremy Levis, and Confessions of a Poet, are powerfully written and deeply interesting. The latter is more like Mr. Dana's Tom Thornton than any other American novel. It illustrates the metaphysics of passion, and in construction, and in all respects, indeed, is superior to his first work, though both inculcate a questionable morality."—Griswold's Prose-Writers of America, 4th ed., 1852, 32.

The Confessions of a Poet was severely condemned by a portion of the New York press, especially by The Commercial Advertiser, edited by the late Colonel Stone, whereupon Mr. Osborn issued a poetical satire on his critics, entitled (4) The Vision of Rubeta; an Epic Story of the Island of Manhattan, with Illustrations done on Stone, Bost., 1838, 8vo. This work elicited at least as much censure as had been provoked by its predecessor. 5. Osborne, Francis, 1589?–1659, a son of Sir John Osborne, of Chicksand, pub. a number of works, theological, moral, historical, and political, nearly all of which are now forgotten. Among his publications are: 1. Advice to a Son: Pt. 1, 1656, 8vo. Five eds. were pub. within two years. Pt. 2, 1658, 8vo. Osborne's Advice to his Son was charged by some Puritan divines with a tendency to atheistical principles, and in July 27, 1658, an order was passed forbidding the sale of the work.

"Osborne's Advice to his Son may be reckoned among the moral and political writings of this period. It is not very far above mediocrity, and contains a good deal that is commonplace, yet with a considerable sprinkling of sound sense and observation. The style is rather apophthegmatic, though by no means more so than was then usual."—Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, iii. 318.

Osgood, David, D.D., 1747–1822, minister of Medford, Mass., graduated at Harvard College, 1771, ordained in 1774, was a descendant of John Osgood, one of the founders of Andover, Mass. He pub. many occasional serms., and A Solemn Protest against the Declaration of War, 1812. A vol. of his Sermons was pub. after his death, Bost., 1824, 8vo. See Sprague's Annals, Trin. Congreg., ii. 72–84; Chris. Disc., iv. 464; Holgate's American Genealogy.

Osgood, Mrs. Francis Sargent, 1812–1850, a native of Boston, Massachusetts, the daughter of Mr. Joseph Locke, a merchant of that city, was in 1834 married to Mr. S. S. Osgood, a painter, and soon afterwards accompanied her husband to London, where they resided for four years. In 1840 they returned to America and settled in the city of New York, where Mrs. Osgood remained until her death. 1. The Casket of Fate, Lon. 2. A Wreath of Wild Flowers from New England, 1838, 12mo, pp. 364. This volume, pub. whilst the author was still in London, but containing a number of poems written at the ages of thirteen and fourteen, was received with great favour by the English critics: The Literary Gazette, Monthly Chronicle, Court Journal, Court and Ladies' Magazine, La Belle Assemblée, and Times, each had something to say in its praise. The position in literary society which, through the influence of Mr. Rogers, Mrs. Norton, and other admirers of her own and her husband's talents, Mrs. Osgood had already secured, was confirmed by this evidence of her poetical abilities. The volume was briefly noticed at home in the North American Review for January, 1840.

"The poems in this volume," remarks the reviewer, "are mostly of the kind called fugitive. They are marked by the usual defects of poems of this class; but the defects are compensated by more than the usual merits and beauties found in them. In fact, these hasty productions of our countrywoman show uncommon liveliness of fancy, a ready and flowing style, and very happy descriptive powers."—269–270.

In early youth Mrs. Osgood was a contributor (under the signature of Florence) to The Juvenile Miscellany, edited by Mrs. Maria L. Child, and to the Ladies' Magazine; and she subsequently published many prose and poetical articles in the English and American periodicals and the annuals, and for a short time acted as editor of The Ladies' Companion. Soon after her death, a volume of epicedial offerings by her literary friends, entitled The Memorial, was pub. by Mr. Putnam, of New York, 1851; and to this collection, and especially to the biographical notice by Dr. R. W. Griswold, we refer our readers. See also Griswold's Female Poets of America; Mrs. Hale's Woman's Record; T. B. "Of none of our writers has the excellence been more steadily progressive. Every month her powers have seemed to expand and her sympathies to deepen. With an ear delicately susceptible to the harmony of language, and a light and pleasing fancy, she always wrote musically and often with elegance; but her later poems are marked by a freedom of style, a tenderness of feeling, and a wisdom of apprehension, and are informed with a grace so undefinable but so pervading and attractive, that the consideration to which she is entitled is altogether different in kind, as well as in degree, from that which was awarded to the playful, piquant, and capricious improvisatrice of former years."—Griswold's Female Prose-Writers of America, 2d ed., 1853, 273.

"She excels in light and sportive sallies; but her grave poems have a tenderness and depth of thought that show her power to touch and elevate the heart as well as to captivate the fancy."—MRS. E. F. ELLET: N. Amer. Rev., April, 1849, 432.

"There is scarcely a form of poetical composition in which she has not made experiment; and there is none in which she has not very happily succeeded. Her defects are chiefly negative, and by no means numerous. . . . A happy refinement—an instinct of the pure and delicate—is one of her most noticeable excellencies. . . . Fancy and naïveté appear in all she writes."—Poe's Literati, 87–99.

Ossoli, Marchesa d', before her marriage Miss Margaret Sarah Fuller, a daughter of Mr. Timothy Fuller, member of the National Congress, was b. at her father's residence, Cambridge, Massachusetts, May 23, 1810, and perished—with her husband, child, and a number of other passengers—in the wreck of the ship Elizabeth, on the beach of Fire Island, June 16, 1850. Miss Fuller was distinguished at a very early age for her knowledge of the Greek and Latin classics, her enjoyment of the lucubrations of Goethe, Schiller, Tieck, and Richter, her conversational fluency, and her remarkable power of communicating her literary enthusiasm to her companions. In 1836 she became a teacher of Latin and French in Mr. Alcot's school in Boston, and in the intervals of her engagements instructed a class of young ladies in French, German, and Italian. In the next year she assumed the responsible position of principal teacher in the Greene Street School at Providence; but this connexion was not of long duration. In 1839 she established in Boston a species of conversazione, which soon attracted considerable attention and seems to have afforded great gratification to the literary ladies, married and single, of that learned capital. In 1840 and '41, she discharged the duties connected with the editorship of The Dial, the medium through which her friend Mr. Emerson communicated many of his philosophical reveries to the public. In 1843 Miss Fuller travelled for some time in the West, and gave the results of her observations in a volume entitled Summer on the Lakes. In the next year she resided in the city of New York, as a contributor to the Tribune, and published in that paper many critical articles, a portion of which have been since reprinted in her Papers on Literature and Art. (See No. 5, post.) She sailed for Europe in 1846, and, after an introduction to many of the most prominent literary celebrities of England and to Madame George Sand, of Paris, she reached Rome in 1847. In December, 1847, she was married to the Marquis d'Ossoli. On the 17th of May, 1850, accompanied by her husband and child, she sailed from Leghorn for New York. The melancholy catastrophe by which so many of the "homeward bound" were suddenly summoned to the spirit-land has been already noticed. A monument to the Ossoli family, designed and executed by Mr. Thomas Carew, an artist of Boston, was erected on Pyrola Path, Mt. Auburn Cemetery.

"Many of the descriptions in this volume are unrivalled for graphicality. (why is there not such a word?) for the force with which they convey the true by the novel, or the unexpected by the introduction of touches which other artists would be sure to omit as irrelevant to the subject."—Poe's Literati, 1850, 74.

4. Woman in the Nineteenth Century, N. York, 1845, 12mo. This may be called an enlarged edition of an essay (Woman, &c.) in The Dial. New ed.—Woman in the Nineteenth Century, and Kindred Papers relating to the Sphere, Condition, and Duties of Woman, edited by her brother, [Rev.] Arthur B. Fuller, with an Introduction by Horace Greeley, Bost., 1855, 12mo, pp. 428. The latter half of this work consists of new matter heretofore unpublished.

"Every page is loaded—we had almost said overloaded—with thought, and the subject is one which the writer had so near her heart that it commanded her best powers and warmest sympathies, and cannot fail to instruct and interest the reader even when there is not perfect agreement with the views advanced."—Rev. E. E. Hale: N. Amer. Rev., Oct. 1855, 558. See also N. Amer. Rev., July, 1856, 261, (by Rev. Dr. Hedge.)

"It was allotted to the authoress of 'Woman in the Nineteenth Century' to exhibit in herself those rich elements of character which she claims for her sex in its pages. In this essay we have a faithful reflex of the writer,—her solid culture, rich imagination, and untiring enthusiasm."—Westminster Rev., Jan. 1856.

"Her style is cloudy and rhetorical; her metaphors are vague, her discourses rambling and overlaid with allusions to Greek mythology. But grant all this: no woman will lay down her book without feeling her spirit stirred to desire earnestly after whatsoever things are true, pure, lovely, and of good report."—Lon. Athen., 1855, 811.

"Apart from the pernicious over-stimulating education she received from her father, and the culture of big phrases and pompous generalities fostered by her connexion with Emerson and a society in which his order of mind is the accepted beau idéal, she would have been a lively, graceful, tender, and thoughtful woman, blending a sound understanding and a warm heart with a brilliant faculty of expression. Aiming to become a Hypatia, she fails to be what Nature intended her for: and her writings, so far as this volume gives indication of her performance, show little but unsuccessful effort."—Lon. Spectator.

"Her critical essays, and especially her papers on Goethe, in The Dial, are unsurpassed in their kind. But all that she has written is fragmentary,—nothing epic, nothing that possesses formal excellence, no one complete work."—N. Amer. Rev., July, 1856, 262, q. v.

6. At Home and Abroad; or, Things and Thoughts in America and Europe; edited by her brother, Arthur B. Fuller, Bost., 1856, 12mo; 4th ed. same year. This vol., which contains more than 450 pages, consists of four parts,—viz.: Part 1, Summer on the Lakes, (see No. 3;) Part 2, Letters from Europe, originally pub. in the New York Tribune, 1848–49; Part 3, Letters from Abroad to the Author's American friends. Part 4 contains biographical notices of the Marchesa d'Ossoli by Bayard Taylor and Horace Greeley, and commemorative poems by W. S. Landor, G. P. R. James, C. P. Cranch, and other writers. Reviews of this work will be found in the North American Review, July, 1856, 261–264, (favourable,) and the London Athenæum, 1856, 489, (not commendatory.) We have before us five commendations of this volume, of which we subjoin one or two:

"We need do little more than tell our readers that a well-filled volume has been published of the Thoughts at Home and Abroad of Margaret Fuller Ossoli, a high-minded woman, with whom it is a privilege to be brought into sympathy through any collection of her writings."—Lon. Examiner.

"They [the Letters from Italy] have indeed a double value,—a value not only biographical, but historical. . . . It will bring those events nearer to the imagination of the ordinary reader, and help him to make a picture of what has hitherto perhaps been a rough diagram in his mind; and to the historian in search of materials it is likely to contribute some valuable touches."—Lon. Leader.

The Marchesa d'Ossoli had prepared for publication a work entitled The Recent Revolution in Europe. The MS. was lost at the time of the shipwreck of the vessel in which the author perished. As she was personally familiar with the actions and actors of the exciting period to which she refers, and officiated as nurse to many of the wounded patriots in the hospital of the Fate-Bene Fratelli, the loss of this work is greatly to be deplored. In 1851 appeared Memoirs of Margaret Fuller Ossoli, by Ralph Waldo Emerson, William Henry Channing, and James Freeman Clarke, Bost., 2 vols. 12mo; Lon., 1852, 3 vols. p. 8vo. These volumes contain contributions from numbers of friends in America and Italy. The labours of the editors failed to elicit the approval of the London Athenæum: see that periodical, 1852, 159, 193, 1856, 489. See also Eclec. The original work was pub. Parigi, 1809, 4 vols. 8vo; Milano, 1819, 4 vols. 8vo; in French, Paris, 1812, 4 vols. 8vo.

"It is a little singular that, with all that has been written about our Revolution, its completest and most graphic delineation is still to be found in this history of the Italian Botta. . . . No American history, Hildreth's included, at all equals, in breadth of handling, vigor of description, and philosophic candor, this work. It has a standard value, and should be in every library."—N. York Eclec. Mag., 1852.

The critic of the North American Review for July, 1821, applauds the skill of Mr. Botta in "making his whole work one continuous and complete narrative, the several parts of which, though various, are connected by natural and agreeable transitions, are duly proportioned to each other, and each in its place."—xiii. 169, 200.

Otis, James, 1725–1783, a native of Great Marshes, (now West Barnstable,) Mass., graduated at Harvard College, 1743, early distinguished himself as one of the most eloquent, energetic, and uncompromising advocates of the liberties of the Boston colonies. His great speech in 1761 against the Writs of Assistance is described by one of his auditors, John Adams,—then in his twenty-sixth year,—in language which should be familiar to every schoolboy in the land. His severe attacks upon the Commissioners of the Customs provoked an assault upon his person in 1769, and he was so injured by a number of cowardly ruffians that his reasoning-faculties were impaired for life. He was killed by a flash of lightning, May 23, 1783, whilst standing at the door of Isaac Osgood's house in Andover. 1. The Rudiments of Latin Prosody, Bost., 1760, 12mo, pp. 72. Otway, Capt. Joseph. Trans. of Count Turpin's Essay on the Art of War, Lon., 1761, 2 vols. 4to.

Otway, Sylvester, i.e. Oswald, John, R. Army.

Otway, Thomas, 1651–1685, a son of the Rev. Humphrey Otway, Curate of Trotton, and subsequently Rector of Woolbeding, Sussex, was a native of the latter place; educated at Christ Church, Oxford; went to London, and made his appearance on the stage without success; commenced dramatic authorship as a means of livelihood, and produced two plays which have survived, and more which are forgotten. His first play—Alcibiades, a Tragedy—was performed in 1675; Don Carlos, a Tragedy, took the town by storm in 1676; Titus and Berenice, a Tragedy, a translation from Rapin, was pub. in 1677; and the Cheats of Scapin, a Farce, from Molière, in the same year. To these succeeded Friendship in Fashion, a Comedy, 1678; The Orphan, a Tragedy, in 1680, (taken from Robert Tailor's play The Hog hath Lost his Pearl;) Caius Marius, a Tragedy, (partly borrowed from Romeo and Juliet,) in the same year; Venice Preserved, or The Plot Discovered, a Tragedy, in Feb. 1680–81; The Soldier's Fortune, a Comedy. First Part, 1681; The Atheist, or The Second Part of the Soldier's Fortune, 1684. His only other publications were The Poet's Complaint of his Muse, or a Satire against Libels, a Poem, 1680, 4to; and Windsor Castle, a Monument to Charles II., 1684, 4to. In the year after his death was pub. History of the Triumvirate, trans. from the French, 1686, 8vo; Heroic Friendship, a Tragedy, 1719, 4to, has been attributed to him, but without foundation. A collective ed. of his Works was pub. in 1712, 2 vols. 12mo; another in 1718, 2 vols. 12mo; another in 1757, 3 vols. 12mo; another in 1768, 3 vols. 12mo; another in 1812, 2 vols. 12mo; and the last in 1813, 3 vols. 12mo. Contents of Vol. I. Advertisement; Life of the Author; Alcibiades; Don Carlos; Titus and Berenice; The Cheats of Scapin; Vol. II. Friendship in Fashion; Caius Marius; The Orphan; The Soldier's Fortune; The Poet's Complaint of his Muse; Notes; Windsor Castle; Epistles, Translations, Prologues, and Miscellaneous Poems; Letters; Appendix. Some copies of this ed. are on large paper, 3 vols. r. 8vo.

"The biographical sketch is drawn up with care and ability. . . . The brief critical remarks prefixed to the different plays are generally judicious and able. On the whole we can recommend this as by much the best and most accurate edition of Otway's works now extant; and, as such, it will be a valuable acquisition to every library."—Anti-Jacobin Rev., April, 1813.

Otway's talents secured him friends and his plays brought him money; but he seems to have derived but little benefit from either. The Earl of Plymouth procured him a cornet's commission in a military force sent to Flanders; but the poet soon returned to London "in extreme indigence." It was reported that his death was caused by choking, in his eager haste to swallow a mouthful of roll which came just in time to save him from starvation. According to another version, (see Spence's Anecdotes,) "he died of a fever caught by violent pursuit of a thief that had robbed one of his friends."

His writings, even the best,—The Orphan and Venice Preserved,—are disgraced by intolerable indecencies, which are the more to be regretted from their unnatural connexion with so much eloquence, pathos, and beauty. In the portrayal of scenes of passionate affection, an eminent authority considers that his talents

"rival, at least, and sometimes excel, those of Shakspeare. More tears have been shed, probably, for the sorrows of Belvidera and Monimia than for those of Juliet and Desdemona."—Sir Walter Scott: Miscell. Prose-Works, vol. vi. 356.

We add some other opinions:

The Orphan.

"This is one of the few plays that keep possession of the stage, and has pleased for almost a century, through all the vicissitudes of dramatic fashion. Of this play nothing new can easily be said. It is a domestic tragedy drawn from middle life. Its whole power is upon the affections: for it is not written with much comprehension of thought or elegance of expression. But, if the heart is interested, many other beauties may be wanting, yet not be missed."—Dr. Johnson: Life of Otway.

Mr. Hazlitt finds grave objections to The Orphan, yet admits that "There are lines and passages in it of extreme beauty; and few persons, I conceive, (judging from my own experience,) will read it at a certain time of life without shedding tears over it as fast as the 'Arabian trees their medicinal gums.' Otway always touched the heart, for he had himself a heart."—Lects. on the Age of Elizabeth, Lect. VIII.: Ancient and Modern Literature.

"The plot of the 'Orphan' is as clumsy as it is indelicate."—Neele's Lects. on Eng. Poetry, Lect. IV.

"It was once popular on the stage and gave scope for good acting, but is unpleasing to the delicacy of our own age."—Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, iii. 523.

Venice Preserved.

"I will not defend every thing in his 'Venice Preserved;' but I must bear this testimony to his memory.—that the passions are truly touched in it, though perhaps there is somewhat to be desired both in the grounds of them and in the height and elegance of expression. But nature is there.—which is the greatest beauty."—Dryden: Pref. to Du Fresnoy's Art of Painting, 1695, 4to.

"A tragedy which still continues to be one of the favourites of the public, notwithstanding the want of morality in the original design and the despicable scenes of vile comedy with which he has diversified his tragic action. . . . The work of a man not attentive to decency nor zealous for virtue, but of one who conceived forcibly, and drew originally, by consulting nature in his own breast."—Dr. Johnson: Life of Otway.

"The awful suspense of the situations, the conflict of duties and passions, the intimate bonds that unite the characters together and that are violently rent asunder like the parting of soul and body, the solemn march of the tragical events to the fatal catastrophe that winds up and closes over all, give to this production of Otway's Muse a charm and power that bind it like a spell on the public mind and have made it a proud and inseparable adjunct of the English stage. Thomson has given it due honour in his feeling verse when he exclaims,

> 'See, o'er the stage the ghost of Hamlet stalks,
> Othello raves, poor Monimia mourns,
> And Belvidera pours her soul in love.'"

Hazlitt's Lects. on the Age of Elizabeth, Lect. VIII.: On Ancient and Modern Literature.

"Pierre indeed is one of those villains for whom it is easy to excite the sympathy of the half-principled and the inconsiderate. But the great attraction is in the character of Belvidera; and, when that part is represented by such as we remember to have seen, no tragedy is honoured by such a tribute, not of tears alone, but of more agony than many would seek to endure."—Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, iii. 523.

"Oughtred, though undoubtedly a very great mathematician, was yet far from having the happiest method of treating the subjects he wrote upon. Sententia de Prædestinatione, Lon., 1651, 8vo. 2. Convocation-Book, 1606, concerning the Government of God's Catholick

Church and the Kingdoms of the Whole World, Lon., 1690, 4to. This treatise on the rights of civil and ecclesiastical governors was approved by the Convocations of Canterbury and York, but left unpublished by request of James I. It was first pub. by Archbishop Sancroft, soon after the Revolution, with the design of injuring the new government; but an important passage in it which had been overlooked reconciled Sherlock to the oaths, and he no longer refused to take them. A new ed. of the Convocation-Book, printed from a collation of several MSS., was pub. in the Library of Anglo-Catholic Theology, 1844, 8vo. For Overall's Notes on the Common Prayer, see W. Nicholls's Commentary; for his remarks On a Middle State, see Hon. A. Campbell's Doctrines of a Middle State; and for his remarks on The Necessity of One Visible Head, see Wordsworth's Christian Institutes, iv. 135. See also notices of Bishop Overall in Biog. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, iii. 439; Lord Macaulay's Hist. of Eng., vol. iv., 1856, chap. xvii. Overall is named among the translators of the Bible, and wrote that portion of the Catechism of the Church of England which regards the sacraments. Camden styles him a "prodigious learned man." Wood tells us that he had the character of being the best scholastic divine in the English nation; Smith celebrates him for his distinguished wisdom, erudition, and piety; Bishop Montague affirmed that Vossius's Pelagian History was compiled out of Overall's collections; and the learned Bishop Cosin (his former secretary) calls himself Overall's scholar, declares that he derived all his knowledge from him, and in the inscription on his monument styles him "Vir unde quaque doctissimus, et omni encomio major."

Overbury, R. W. Jesuits, Lon., 1846, fp. 8vo.

Overbury, Sir Thomas, 1581–1613, a son of Nicholas Overbury, bencher of the Middle Temple, was a native of Ilmington, Warwickshire, and educated at Queen's College, where he took the degree of B.A. in 1598. After a short application to the study of the law in the Middle Temple, he travelled for some time on the Continent, and there contracted that taste for a life of fashion and display which was destined to prove his ruin. Whilst on a visit to Scotland in 1601, he made the acquaintance of a page in the service of the Earl of Dunbar,—Ker, or Carr, afterwards Earl of Somerset,—accompanied him to London, shared for a time in his miscalled "good fortune," and in 1613 fell a victim to the baseness of his friend and the revenge of his friend's mistress,—the Countess of Essex,—whose desire to become the wife of her paramour had been thwarted by Overbury. An authentic history of this melancholy affair will be found in a valuable work, recently published, entitled The Great Oyer of Poisoning: the Trial of the Earl of Somerset for the Poisoning of Sir Thomas Overbury, in the Tower of London, and various matters connected therewith, from contemporary MSS., by Andrew Amos, Esq., Lon., 1846, 8vo.

F. Rimbault, LL.D., 1856, fp. 8vo, (in J. Russell Smith's Library of Old English Authors;) Drake's Shakspeare and his Times; Fuller's Worthies; Lon. Retrosp. Rev., 1820, ii. 92–105; Lon. Athen., 1856, 1489–1490.

None of his works appeared until after his decease. As a poet he is known by A Wife, 1614, 4to, and The First and Second Part of the Remedy for Love, 1620,—a paraphrase from Ovid. As a prose-writer he claims notice for his Characters, (pub. with the 2d ed. of The Wife, 1614;) Newes from Any Whence, or Old Truths under a Supposal of Novelty, appended to the Characters; Observations in his Travels upon the State of the Seventeen Provinces as they stood Anno Dom. 1609, 1326, 4to; 1651, 12mo, (see Osborne's Voyages, i. 251;) Crumms fallen from King James's Table, or his Table-Talk, 1715. It has been doubted whether the Observations are really his. Of his Miscellaneous Works in Verse and Prose, 1632, 12mo, &c., and of his Wife and the Characters annexed, there have been many eds.: see Lowndes's Bibl. Man., 1381–1382, Drake's Shaksp. and his Times, i. 509–510, and Rimbault's ed., 1856, supra. The Wife was greatly admired, and elicited a number of imitations,—such as, The Husband, 1614, anon.; A Select Second Husband, by John Davies, of Hereford, 1616; The Description of a Good Wife, by Richard Braithwaite, 1619; A Happy Husband, by Patrick Hannay, 1619.

"These pieces are inferior to their prototype, which, though not displaying much poetic inspiration, is written with elegance and perspicuity."—Drake's Shaksp. and his Times, i. 695. n.

"The 'Wife' is a didactic poem; and, though the precepts which it gives are certainly not of a kind which the reader feels disposed to dispute, they have truly very little to recommend them, being far from remarkable for their ingenuity and certainly not set off by any charms of poetical grace or ornament."—Retrosp. Rev., ii. 93.

Fuller says that Overbury

"attained to be a most accomplished gentleman, which the happiness of his pen both in poetry and prose doth declare. In the latter he was the first writer of characters of our nation, so far as I have observed."—Worthies of Eng., ed. 1840, i. 563.

"With the exception of two small tracts descriptive of the characters of rogues and knaves," remarks Dr. Drake, "this assertion appears to be correct."—Shaksp. and his Times, i. 509.

Drake instances as predecessors The Fraternitye of Uacabondes, 1565; and A Caveat for Common Cursetors, vulgarly called Uagabones, set forth by Thomas Herman, Esq., 1567. But who shall decide that there were no others? What is more uncertain than the chronology of specialties in literature?

"The characters, though rather too antithetical in their style, are drawn with a masterly hand and are evidently the result of personal observation."—DRAKE: ubi supra., i. 510.

"The book itself is seldom read, and not, on the whole, entertaining; but there are portions of it—and numerous portions too—which we think will impress the reader with a high opinion of the author's talent for observation and his power of witty contrast and felicitous though sometimes obscure expression."—Retrosp. Rev., ii. 96, q. v. for specimens.

Mr. Hallam thus contrasts Overbury's Characters with the Microcosmography of Bishop Earle (see p. 539, ante):

"The Microcosmography is not an original work in its plan or mode of execution: it is a close imitation of the Characters of Sir Thomas Overbury. They both belong to the favourite style of apophthegm, in which every sentence is a point or a witticism. Yet the entire character so delineated produces a certain effect: it is a Dutch picture, a Gerard Dow, somewhat too elaborate. Earle has more natural humour than Overbury and hits his mark more neatly; the other is more satirical, but often abusive and vulgar. The Fair and Happy Milkmaid, often quoted, is the best of his Characters. The wit is often trivial and flat: the sentiments have nothing in them general or worthy of much remembrance: praise is only due to the graphic skill in delineating character. Earle is as clearly the better as Overbury is the more original writer."—Lit. Hist of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, iii. 154.

Overs, J. Evenings of a Working-Man; with Preface by Charles Dickens, Lon., 1844, fp. 8vo.

Overstone, Samuel Jones Loyd, first Lord, b. 1796, educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, Member of Parliament 1819–26, raised to the peerage 1850, is the author of a number of tracts on the Currency, Money-Market, &c., which have been already noticed on p. 1141: see LOYD, SAMUEL JONES. His papers on the Bank-Charter Act, &c. in the London Times, under the signature of Mercator, attracted great attention from political economists, bankers, and the most thoughtful of the mercantile classes. In 1857 were pub., in an 8vo vol., Lord Overstone's Tracts and other Publications on Metallic and other Currency, [from 1837 to '57,] edited by J. R. McCulloch.

"Next to the luminous clearness of Lord Overstone's style, which is most refreshing on a subject [currency] which is sometimes made as dry as dust and ashes, the distinguishing merit of his tracts is the steady consistency with which the same broad and really simple views are maintained throughout. From the first sketch, which bears the date of 1837, down to the last letter of 'Mercator,' which appeared quite lately in the Times, the whole volume reads like a continuous treatise. . . . We hope Lord Overstone's writings will exercise in their collected form an influence at least as great as followed their first appearance in a more scattered shape."—*Lon. Overton, John, Rector of St. Margaret and St. Crux, in the city of York, England. 1. The True Churchman Ascertained; or, An Apology for those of the Regular Clergy of the Establishment sometimes called Evangelical Ministers; occasioned by several Modern Publications, York, 1801, 8vo; 1808, 8vo. This work elicited a reply by Charles Daubeny, D.D., (p. 477, ante,) entitled Vindiciæ Ecclesiæ Anglicanæ, Bath, 1803, 8vo. It was also objected to by the British Critic, vols. xxi. and xxii., and by the author of Zeal without Innovation, 1808; and exceptions were taken to portions of it by the Christian Observer. The comments of the last-named periodical were responded to in Four Letters to the Editor of the Christian Observer; being a Reply to that Author's Occasional Strictures on the True Churchman Ascertained, by John Overton, Lon., 1805, 8vo. On the other hand, Bishop Horsley calls The True Churchman Ascertained "a work unanswered and unanswerable;" and the Rev. Charles Simeon, in his Helps to Composition, refers, as the exact statement of his opinions, to "that invaluable book entitled The True Churchman Ascertained, by the Rev. Mr. Overton, of York."

We quote some further opinions:

"It is powerfully written; and I think that he makes good his cause, that the Evangelical Teachers, as they are called, adhere to the doctrines and retain the zeal of the Church of England as originally established, and as still manifest in its Articles, Liturgy, and Homilies; and that those who call themselves Rational Divines are the true seceders from both."—(Green's) *Diary of a Lover of Lit.: Lon. "What will he [the author of Zeal without Innovation, 1808] say of Overton, whose work, for a luminous statement of facts, an accurate arrangement of multifarious articles, and a close deduction of proofs, would do honour to the first polemic of the age?"—Rev. States, graduated at the Ohio Medical College, and was soon appointed State Geologist of Indiana. In 1839, he was employed by the General Government to make a Report on the Mineral Lands of Iowa. This being favourably received, the General Government directed him, in 1848, to survey Minnesota Territory, &c., and Congress voted $40,000 to publish the results in a handsome large 4to vol., with admirable illustrations, particularly of the gigantic mammal remains found in Nebraska. The volume gives elaborate descriptions of the geological formations of the Upper Mississippi, taking up the several rocks in order, describing their features, materials, fossils, range, extent, and economical bearing."—Silliman's Journal, March, 1853.

Owen, George, of Henllys, Pembrokeshire.

"One of the oldest inquirers, we believe, connected with the geology of this ancient region is George Owen, of Henllys, in Pembrokeshire, who has been called the patriarch of English geologists. He lived during the reign of Elizabeth, and wrote, about 1595, a history of his native country.—which, however, remained unpublished till 1799, when it was first printed in a volume of the 'Cambrian Register,' [Lon., 1799, 8vo, vol. ii.,] the ancient style and orthography being very properly preserved."—*Edin. "All Dr. Henry Owen's works are characterised by sound criticism and laborious research. Bp. Owen, John, (Latin Audoenus,) d. 1622, a native of Armon, Caernarvonshire, Probationer-Fellow of New College, Oxford, 1582, and Fellow, 1584, about 1594 became master of the free-school founded by Henry VIII. at Warwick. In 1606, he pub. Epigram lib. 3 ad Mariam Nevill comitis Dorcestriæ filiam dicati, Lon., 1606, 16mo. To these three books additions were made from time to time; and numerous edits. of the complete collection have been pub. Best ed., edited by Renouard, Paris, 1795, 2 vols. 18mo; large paper in 12mo; largest paper, four copies printed in 8vo, and four copies on vellum. English translations of Owen's Epigrams were pub. by John Vicars, 1619, 8vo; Robert Hayman, 1628, [Quodlibets 4to;] Henry Harflete, 1653, sm. 8vo; Thomas Pecke, 1659, sm. 8vo. Owen's epigrams were as much admired abroad as at home. Borrichius, Lorenzo Crasso, and Baillet commended them highly, and Francisco de la Torre pub. his own epigrammata as a supplement to those of the favoured Briton,—Agudezas de Juan Oven, etc., con Adiciones por Francisco de la Torre, Madrid, 1674, '82, 2 tom. 4to. See Ticknor's Hist. of Span. Lit., 1854, iii. 16. Mr. Ticknor remarks of Owen's book, "a volume, it should be noted, so offensive to the Roman Church as to have been early [in 1654] placed on its Index Expurgatorius."— Ubi supra. And no marvel, when we read the following:

"An fuerit Petrus Romæ sub judice lis est;
Simonem Romæ nemo fuisse negat."

"Whether at Rome Peter e'er was or no,
Is much disputed still, I trow;
But Simon's being there, on neither side
Was ever doubted or denied."

See Chalmers's Biog. Dict., xxiii. 451.

This piece of pleasantry lost the poet the favour and patronage of a rich uncle, whose theological sensitiveness was offended by what he deemed unseemly raillery.

Owen's Epigrammata have lost the reputation they once enjoyed:

"He pub. seven books of epigrams, among which are very few that are genuine. The poignant, the lively, the unexpected turn of thought and expression, which has been regularly pursued and carried to a point, is scarcely to be found in the compositions of this author. It is evident, from the quick sale of his book, that epigrams could please at this time without the seasoning of Attic salt."—Granger's Biog. Hist. of Eng., ed. 1824, ii. 132.

"Unequal enough, they are sometimes neat, and more often witty; but they scarcely aspire to the name of poetry."—Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, iii. 53.

Owen, John, D.D., 1616–1683, a native of Stadham, Oxfordshire, and a son of Henry Owen, minister of the parish, was educated at New College, Oxford; became chaplain to Sir Richard Dormer and subsequently to Lord John Lovelace; espoused the cause of the Parliament, and was presented to the living of Fordham, in Essex, from whence he removed to take charge of a congregation at Coggeshall, and about this time renounced Presbytery in favour of Independency; preached the sermon before the House of Commons on the day after the execution of Charles I.; on the 28th February following, preached before Parliament, the chief officers of the army, and Oliver Cromwell, who thenceforth became one of his firmest friends; in 1651, by order of Parliament, made Dean of Christ Church, Oxford, and in 1652 became Vice-Chancellor of the University of Oxford,—Oliver Cromwell being at that time Chancellor; succeeded as Vice-Chancellor by Dr. Conant, in 1657, and as Dean of Christ Church by Dr. Reynolds, in 1659; retired to Stadham, and preached to a congregation, and after the Restoration removed to London, where he filled the pulpit from time to time when Non-Conformists were permitted that liberty; in 1673, succeeded the Rev. Joseph Caryl in the charge of the meeting-house in Leadenhall Street, and took his own congregation with him; lost his first wife in Jan. 1676, and about July, 1677, married the widow of Thomas D'Oyley, Esq., of Chiselhampton, near Stadham; injured his health by excessive devotion to study, and removed for a change of air, first to Woburn, and subsequently to the village of Ealing, where he died, to the great regret of the friends of religion, learning, and virtue, on the 24th of August, 1683. With such moderation had this "Dissenter" comported himself when holding the important post of Vice-Chancellor of Oxford (never permitting the least annoyance to be offered to the Episcopalians who met weekly for liturgical worship) that he was as much beloved by the Churchmen as by his own party. Lord-Chancellor Clarendon offered him immediate preferment if he would conform to the Church of England; and more than sixty of the nobility of the realm followed his remains to his humble grave at Bunhill-fields,—"the Puritan Necropolis." His death was a becoming termination to a life spent in the active exercise of the duties of a holy faith and unwearied zeal in the service of God and man:

"The first sheet of his 'Meditations on the Glory of Christ' had passed through the press under the superintendence of the Rev. William Payne; . . . and, on that person calling on him to inform him of the circumstance on the morning of the day he died, he exclaimed, with uplifted hands and eyes looking upward, 'I am glad to hear it; but, O brother Payne! the long-wished-for day is come at last, in which I shall see that glory in another manner than I have ever done, or was capable of doing, in this world.'"

Thus lived, thus died, and thus was buried, John Owen, "The Great Dissenter," a man of such profound learning and elevation of character that even the narrow-minded and ill-natured Anthony Wood, who never attempts to conceal his contempt for Low-Churchmen, Non-Conformists, and republicans, rebukes his loyalist brethren sharply for their strictures on a character too lofty for them to comprehend, and declares from his own personal knowledge that Owen

"was a person well skilled in the tongues, rabbinical learning, Jewish rites and customs: he had a great command of his English pen, and was one of the most genteel and fairest writers who have ever appeared against the Church of England, as handling his adversaries with far more civil, decent, and temperate language than many of his fiery brethren, and by confining himself wholly to the cause without the unbecoming mixture of personal slanders and reflection."—Athen. Oxon., Bliss's ed., iv. 102, q. v. for evidence of the truth of this assertion.

Dr. Owen was the author of more than eighty publications, all theological: sixty-seven were pub. in his lifetime, from 1642–82, and seventeen between 1683 and 1760, both inclusive. Of these, seven were in folio, thirty-nine in quarto, eighteen in octavo, and sixteen in 12mo. Of these publications, (of which nine are separate sermons,) four folios were consecutive portions of the Exposition of the Hebrews; two octavos were the two Parts of the Meditations on the Glory of Christ; a volume of Sermons and Tracts, 1721, fol., contains some pieces already republished; and it is probable that a number of sermons were published more than once in different volumes of the series of eighty publications referred to above. When the folio vol. of Sermons and Tracts was pub. in 1721, it was intended to issue in uniform volumes a complete edition of Owen's Works, and 375 subscribers were obtained for the series. The project, however, was abandoned; and it was not until 1826 that a collective edition of the works of the Great Puritan were given to the world. It was pub. in 20 vols. 8vo, London, under the editorial supervision of the Rev. Daniel Russell, a Dissenting minister in the vicinity of London, and prefaced by the Rev. Wm. Orme's Memoir of the Life and Writings of the Author, making 21 vols. in all. This edition, for which 346 subscribers were obtained, at £12 12*s.*, in which many old errors are perpetuated, does not contain the Exposition of the Epistle to the Hebrews, the ΘΕΟΛΟΓΟΥΜΕΝΑ ΠΑΝΤΟΔΑΠΑ· sive de Natura, Ortu, Progressu, et Studio, Veræ Theologiæ, and some sermons of Owen's,—first published in 1854, in Goold's edition, to be noticed hereafter. There was generally sold with it the 2d ed. of the Exposition of the Epistle to the Hebrews, edited by James Wright, Edin., 7 vols. 8vo.

"It was a real service to the Church to have his works collected as they are (including the Exposition of the Epistle to the Hebrews) in 28 vols. 8vo; and they will furnish the student with ample defence of the gospel against its various enemies."—Bickersteth's C. S., 1844, 268.

But a far greater service was rendered by the publishers and editor of the Rev. Wm. H. Goold's (of Edinburgh) edition, Edinburgh, 1850–55, 24 vols. 8vo, pub. at (£4 18*s.* 9*d.*) less than half the price of the ed. of 1826, and worth, all things considered, about as much again. The arrangement is as follows:

Contents of the twenty-four volumes. Division I.,—Doctrinal. Vol. I. Life of Dr. Owen, by Rev. Dr. Andrew Thomson; 1. On the Person of Christ; 2. Meditations and Discourses on the Glory of Christ; 3. Meditations and Discourses on the Glory of Christ applied to Sinners and Saints; 4. Two Short Catechisms. II. 1. On Communion with God; 2. Vindication of the Preceding Discourse; 3. Vindication of the Doctrine of the Trinity. III. Division III.,—Controversial. Vol. X. 1. A Display of Arminianism; 2. The Death of Death in the Death of Christ; 3. On the Death of Christ; 4. A Dissertation on Divine Justice. XI. The Doctrine of the Saints' Perseverance Explained and Confirmed. XII. 1. Vindiciæ Evangelicæ; or, The Mystery of the Gospel Vindicated and Socinianism Examined; 2. Of the Death of Christ, and of Justification; 3. On the Annotations of Grotius. XIII. 1. The Duty of Pastors and People Distinguished; 2. Eshcol: a Cluster of the Fruit of Canaan; 3. Of Schism; in Three Books; 4. Non-Conformity Vindicated; 5. Tracts on the Power of the Magistrates, Indulgence, Toleration, etc. XIV. 1. Animadversions on "Fiat Lux;" 2. Vindication of Animadversions; 3. The Church of Rome no Safe Church; 4. On Union among Protestants; 5. State and Fate of Protestantism. XV. 1. Discourse concerning Liturgies; 2. Discourse concerning Evangelical Love, Church Peace, and Unity; 3. Inquiry concerning Evangelical Churches; 4. Instruction in Worship of God. XVI. 1. True Nature of a Gospel Church; 2. Tracts on Excommunication, Church Company, Baptism, etc.; 3. On the Divine Original of the Scriptures; 4. Pro Sacris Scripturis adversus hujus temporis Fanaticos Exercitationes apologeticæ; 5. Indices. XVII. 1. ΘΕΟΛΟΓΟΥΜΕΝΑ ΠΑΝΤΟΔΑΠΑ· sive, de Natura, Ortu, Progressu, et Studio, Veræ Theologiæ; 2. Posthumous Sermons, first published in 1854, together with Three Discourses published in 1798; XVIII.–XXIV. An Exposition of the Epistle to the Hebrews.

In this excellent edition many typographical errors, some of which were inherited by the edition of 1826 from previous blunders, have been corrected; the punctuation has been thoroughly revised; the Scripture references and the most important quotations from the Greek and Latin Fathers have been verified and collated, and, where faulty, rectified. We have before us commendatory notices of this edition by the North British Review, Kitto's Journal, Evangelical Christendom, English Presbyterian Messenger, Christian Times, Protestant World, Baptist Magazine, Non-Conformist, Banner of Ulster, British Banner, Scottish Evangelical Magazine, Scottish Congregational Magazine, Scottish Press, Scottish Guardian, and Edinburgh Witness. From the first-named of these we extract a few lines:

"As North British Reviewers, we congratulate our country on having produced this beautiful reprint of the illustrious Puritan; and, from the fact that they have offered it at a price which has introduced it to four thousand libraries, we must regard the publishers as benefactors to modern theology. The editor has consecrated all his learning and all his industry to his labour of love; and, by all accounts, the previous copies needed a reviser as careful and competent as Dr. Goold. Dr. Thomson's memoir of the author we have read with singular pleasure. It exhibits much research and a fine appreciation of Dr. Owen's characteristic excellencies, and its tone is kind and catholic. Such reprints, rightly used, will be a new era in our Christian literature. They can scarcely fail to intensify the devotion and invigorate the faculties of such as read them. . . . The works of Owen are an exhaustless magazine."—vol. xvi., 1851.

We proceed to notice some of the best-known of Owen's works and give the dates of their first publication.

1. ΘΕΟΜΑΧΙΑ 'ΑΥΤΕΖΘΙΑΣΙΚΕ; or, Display of Arminianisme, 1642, 4to. New ed., revised and corrected by S. Burder. This is his first work.

"Owen's Display is a barrier raised against prevailing opinions. Each chapter contains a statement of the Arminian doctrine on the point discussed, with Owen's answer: while at the end of each chapter the Arminian doctrine is more briefly stated in the language of some Arminian writer, and confronted in opposite columns by passages of Scripture."—Thomson's Life of Owen.

"It became so popular as to procure the author very general respect, and is still indeed considered a very able performance, but at that time was thought particularly seasonable.—Arminianism, and the steps Archbishop Laud took to encourage such opinions, having engaged the attention of all who meditated the changes or reformation in church and state which afterwards followed."—Biog. Brit.

2. Salus Electorum, Sanguis Iesu; or, The Death of Death in the Death of Christ, 1643, 4to; 1648, 4to; 1845, 12mo.

"Owen does not merely touch his subject, but travels through it with the elephant's grave and solemn step, if sometimes also with his ungainly motion, and more than any other author makes you feel, when he has reached the end of his subject, that he has exhausted it. . . . This great work was the occasion of much controversy; and it is worthy of especial notice that it was the first production that turned towards Owen the keen eye of Richard Baxter and brought the two great Puritans at length to measure arms."—Thomson's Life of Owen.

"It is a work of deep learning and research."—Orme's Life of Owen.

3. The Duty of Pastors and People Distinguished, 1644, 4to. This principally refers to the duties of the people. 4. The Doctrine of the Saints' Perseverance Explained and Confirmed, 1654, fol.: see GOODWIN, JOHN. 5. Vindiciæ Evangelicæ, 1655, sm. 4to. Written in defence of the "Deity and Satisfaction of Jesus Christ," and in "confutation of J. Biddle's 'Scripture Catechisme,' the 'Racovian Catechisme,' and the Annotations of Hugo Grotius."

"It is an accurate and elaborate performance, and was undertaken at the desire of the Council of State. In a large preface he gives a particular history of the opposition that has been made to the doctrine of the Trinity, especially the deity of Christ, beginning at Simon Magus, down to his own time. He also points out the disingenuous subterfuges resorted to by the enemies of this doctrine and the means they made use of to deceive the people."—Wilson's Hist. of Dissenting Churches, i. 208.

"Contains a learned and important narrative of the progress of Anti-Trinitarianism, and is replete with curious information respecting the characters and proceedings of the first founders."—Orme's Life of Owen.

"No part of this history is of more permanent value than his remarks on the controversial tactics of Socinians."—Thomson's Life of Owen.

6. The Mortification of Sin in Believers, 1656, 8vo; 1658, 8vo; 1842, 18mo. In same vol. with No. 12, (Doctrinal Puritans, No. XL.,) 1847, 18mo.

"We have not seen him in all his greatness until in such practical works as his treatise on the 'Mortification of Sin in Believers' he brings the truth into contact not so much with the errors of the heretic as with the corruption and deceitfulness of the human heart."—Thomson's Life of Owen.

7. The Nature of Schisme, 1657, 12mo.

"He that undertakes to play this great gun had need to be very careful and sponge it well, lest it fire at home."—VINCENT ALSOP.

This work excited a controversy in which Daniel Cawdrey, Giles Firman, Dr. Hammond, and Archbishop Bramhall took part. See Lowndes's Brit. Lib., 1132.

8. Of the Divine Original, Authority, &c. of the Scriptures, 1659, 8vo. 9. ΘΕΟΛΟΓΟΥΜΕΝΑ ΠΑΝΤΟΔΑΠΑ· sive, de Natura, Ortu, Progressu, et Studio, Veræ Theologiæ, 1661, 4to; Bremæ, 1684, 4to; Franeker, 1700. This work—"to which Owen was chiefly indebted for his fame among Continental divines, and of which two editions were printed abroad"—was not reprinted in the collective ed. of Owen's Works of 1826. In Goold's ed., 1850–55, it appears in the original Latin, prefaced by "a copious analysis in English."

"Though not a complete body of divinity, it is well calculated to assist in forming a judgment of the comparative merits of systems and of divine truth."—Williams's C. P., 1843, 299.

10. Animadversions on Fiat Lux, by a Protestant, 1662, 12mo. This answer to John Vincent Cane's Fiat Lux displeased the author, who responded in his Vindication of Fiat Lux, (to which Owen repub. a rejoinder, 1664, 8vo,) and delighted Lord Clarendon, who tried to persuade Owen to conform to the Church of England. 11. A Discourse on Liturgies, 1662, 4to. 12. The Power of Indwelling Sin in Believers, 1668, 8vo; 1824, 8vo. See No. 6.

"There is no treatise of its learned and pious author more fitted to be useful to the Christian disciple."—DR. CHALMERS.

13. Exposition of the Epistle of St. Paul to the Hebrews; with Preliminary Exercitations, fol.: vol. i., 1668; ii., 1674; iii., 1680; iv., 1684; 2d ed., corrected, with the Author's Treatise on the Sabbath, and Indexes, 1812–14, 7 vols. 8vo; some copies r. 8vo; 1838, 4 vols. 8vo; 1840, 4 vols. 8vo. Revised and Abridged, with a Life of the Author, by Edward Williams, D.D., 1790, 4 vols. 8vo; 2d ed., 1815, 4 vols. 8vo.

"The reader who has no opportunity to compare this edition with the original work may depend upon it that all the valuable, useful, and pertinent criticisms, the most forcible arguments in proof of any important point, the most evangelical and sublime sentiments and doctrines, the most close, convincing, and edifying improvements, the most animated and pathetic addresses and exhortations, contained in the other, are preserved in this. And I cannot help thinking that with the exercitations it may be reckoned one of the most valuable systems of doctrinal, practical, and experimental divinity that is to be met with in the English language."—DR. E. WILLIAMS.

"The abridgment by Dr. Williams in 4 vols. 8vo is by some preferred to the prolix original."—Bickersteth's C. S., 1844, 416.

Simon Commenicq, a merchant of Rotterdam, trans. the Exposition into Dutch, Amst., 1733–40, 7 vols. 4to, and gratuitously circulated most of the impression. We give some opinions of this great work:

"The spirit and manner in which he pursued his work is described by himself, and forms one of the most valuable portions of autobiography in all Owen's writings. . . . The result has been a work unequalled in excellence, except perhaps by Vitringa's noble Commentary on Isaiah. . . . There is true sublimity in the exclamation with which Owen laid down his pen when he had finished it: 'Now my work is done: it is time for me to die.' Perhaps no minister in Great Britain or America for the last hundred and fifty years has sat down to the exposition of this portion of inspired truth without consulting Owen's Commentary."—Thomson's Life of Owen.

"With all its prolixity, probably the most elaborate and instructive comment on a detached portion of Scripture."—REV. C. BRIDGES: The Christian Ministry, 42–44, q. v. for a notice of several of Owen's works.

"Giving evidence of the learning and theological insight of its truly pious author."—THOLUCK.

"An exceedingly valuable practical work."—Bickersteth's C. S., 1844. 416.

"If the theological student should part with his coat or his bed to procure the works of Howe, he that would not sell his shirt to procure those of John Owen, and especially his Exposition, of which every sentence is precious, shews too much regard to the body and too little for his immortal mind."—Bogue and Bennett's Hist. of Dissenters, 1812, 4 vols. 8vo.

"Let me again recommend your studious and sustained attention," remarks Dr. Chalmers to his students, "to the Epistle to the Hebrews. . . . I promise you a hundredfold more advantage from the perusal of this greatest work of John Owen than from the perusal of all that has been written on the subject of the heathen sacrifices. It is a work of gigantic strength as well as gigantic size; and he who hath mastered it is very little short, both in respect to the doctrinal and practical of Christianity, of being an erudite and accomplished theologian."—Prelections on Hill's Lects.: Chalmers's Posth. Works, ix. 282.

"This work is particularly valuable for its illustrating of the Epistle to the Hebrews by the aid of Rabbinical learning: it is replete with doctrinal and experimental remarks."—Horne's Bibl. Bib., 1839. 327.

"This is the most valuable exposition of the Epistle to the Hebrews ever published, [written in 1824.] The preliminary exercitations, which occupy the first two volumes of the octavo edition [edited by Wright. Edin., 1818–14, 7 vols. 8vo] supply an immense mass of learned information on all the important points of the Jewish controversy. The exposition itself, though prolix, is not tiresome, and judiciously combines criticism, exposition, and practical instruction. This is the only expository work of any extent published by Owen: but several of his other writings well deserve a careful perusal for the light they throw on the Scriptures,—such as his Vindiciæ Evangelicæ, his work on the 130th Psalm, and his work on the Spirit. For extended notices of all his writings I beg to refer the reader to [Orme's] Memoirs of the Life Writings, and Religious Connexions of John Owen, D.D., Lon., 1820, [8vo, 2d ed., enlarged, 1842, 8vo.]"—Orme's Bibl. Bib., 1824.

Robert Hall by no means concurs in the enthusiastic admiration which we have seen displayed by so many critics. When Mr. Balmer told him that he had read a number of Owen's works, he replied,

"You astonish me, sir, by your patience. You have accomplished a Herculean undertaking in reading Owen's Preliminary Exercitations. To me it is intolerably heavy and prolix."—Robert Hall's Works, ed. 1853, vi. 120.

Dr. Thomson—Owen's latest biographer—attributes this dislike to Owen's writings (of which we shall presently give further evidence) to Hall's love of paradox, and his slight acquaintance with the productions of the author of the Exposition; but this is a question which we shall defer to the consideration of the reader. Of all the admirers of Owen none has expressed himself with greater vigour than Dr. John Ryland:

"This book bears the same rank, and has the same relation to the study of divinity, which the 'Principia' of Sir Isaac Newton bears to the true system of the world in the study of natural philosophy: and it is of equal importance to all young divines which that great man's work is to young philosophers. . . . I am ashamed of my countrymen for their ignorance of this incomparable work,—perhaps the very greatest of the kind that ever was written by a British divine; and it now lies buried in dust amidst the lumber of a bookseller's garret, whilst a thousand volumes of wretched trash in divinity, with their pompous bindings, stand as monuments of human folly in our bookcases and libraries."—JOHN RYLAND, D.D., in his Select Library for a Student of Divinity, pub. in his reprint of Cotton Mather's Student and Preacher, 1781.

"Most excellent."—DR. DODDRIDGE.

"His book on the 130th Psalm is a full display of evangelical forgiveness. The Christian familiar with the conflicting exercises of experimental religion will be sensible of its value."—Bickersteth's C. S., 1844. 268.

"It is a most excellent work on repentance and forgiveness, and enters deeply into several parts of experimental religion."—Williams's C. P., 1843, 288.

"His Exposition of Psalm CXXX. exhibits the most full and unfettered display of divine forgiveness, admirably suited to the perplexities of exercised Christians."—REV. C. BRIDGES: The Christian Ministry, 42–44.

"A book which, with all its acknowledged prolixity and even its occasional obscurity, is rich in golden thoughts and instinct with the living experience of one who spake what he knew and testified what he had seen."—Thomson's Life of Owen.

15. Vindication of the Doctrine of the Trinity, 1669, 8vo. 16. Exercitations concerning the Name, Original, Nature, Use, and Continuance of a Day of Sacred Rest, 1671, 8vo. Of this work, intended as a refutation of Dr. Peter Heylin's History of the Sabbath, 1636, 4to, a new ed., revised and edited by the Rev. J. W. Brooks, was pub. 18—, 12mo. An abridged ed. has likewise appeared. An Examination of Dr. Owen's Book concerning the Sabbath, by Wm. Sellers, was pub. in 1671, 4to. 17. Discourse concerning Evangelical Love, Church Peace, and Unity, 1672, 8vo. 18. ΠΝΕΖΜΑΤΟΛΟΓΙΑ; or, A Discourse concerning the Holy Spirit: His Name, Nature, Personality, Dispensation, Operations, and Effects, 1674, fol.; 1791, 2 vols. 8vo. Abridged by George Burder, 1792, 12mo; 4th ed., Lon., 1808, 12mo; 5th ed., with addits., 1834, 12mo. This was one of Wilberforce's "great theological text-books."

"The better part of two centuries has elapsed [i.e. by 1850] since this work of Owen's was given to the world, and yet no English work on the same vital subject has approached it in exhaustive fulness."—Thomson's Life of Owen.

"Owen on the Holy Spirit has been my treasure-house and one of my first-rate books."—Richard Cecil: Cecil's Works, ii. 514: Remains.

"His work on the Spirit (though discordant in some particulars from the principles of our church) embraces the most comprehensive view of this vitally-important subject."—Rev. C. Bridges: The Christian Ministry, 42–44.

"A work of incomparable value: it is worth its weight in gold."—Dr. John Ryland.

Walter Wilson calls Burder's reprint "a good abridgement."

"A work which, together with its continuation, the 'Meditations on the Glory of Christ,' of all the theological works published by individuals since the Reformation, next to 'Calvin's Institutions,' we would have deemed it our highest honour to have produced."—Dr. Thomas McCrie. See No. 25.

22. An Inquiry into the Original, Nature, &c. of Evangelical Churches, 1681, 4to; 1696, 4to.

"It is an important work."—Orme's Life of Owen.

23. On Spiritual-Mindedness, 1681, 4to.

"His view of spiritual-mindedness draws out a graphic delineation of the tastes and features of the new character."—Rev. C. Bridges: The Christian Ministry, 42–44.

24. A Discourse on the Work of the Holy Spirit in Prayer, 1682, 4to.

"An excellent treatise, with some of the peculiarities of his circumstances. He seems scarcely to allow the work of the Spirit with forms of prayer."—Bickersteth's C. S., 1844. 431.

25. Meditations and Discourses on the Glory of Christ: Pt. 1, 1684, 8vo; Pt. 2, 1691, 8vo; 1811, 12mo; 1853, 18mo.

"Little in size, not so in value."—Hervey's Theron and Aspasio.

"Owen's Meditations on the Glory of Christ, and Baxter's Dying Thoughts, furnish specimens of the maturity of the Christian light and love." See No. 21.

26. The True Nature of the Gospel Church, and its Government, 1689, 4to; 1801, 12mo.

"The arguments for Independency may be sufficiently seen in the works of Dr. Owen."—Bickersteth.

Rev., v. 601, vi. 5, (Owen on the Church; by L. H. Atwater.)

The works of few writers have elicited so large an amount of unmixed eulogy as has been lavished upon the productions of John Owen. In this admiration, as we have already had occasion to notice, Robert Hall did not profess to share.

"I can't think how you like Dr. Owen," he remarks to a friend. "I can't read him with any patience. I never read a page of Dr. Owen, sir, without finding some confusion in his thoughts.—either a truism or a contradiction in terms. . . . Sir, he is a double Dutchman floundering in a continent of mud."—Greene's Reminiscences of the Rev. Robert Hall, 2d ed., 67, 69.

On another occasion he remarked to Mr. Balmer, (we have already quoted a portion of the conversation,)

"As a reasoner, Dr. Owen is most illogical; for he almost always takes for granted what he ought to prove; while he is always proving what he ought to take for granted; and, after a long digression, he concludes very properly with, 'This is not our concernment,' and returns to enter on something still farther from the point."—Hall's Works, ed. 1853, vi. 120.

Mr. Balmer thought a little—and only a little—better of the author thus criticized; but the weight of evidence is greatly against these gentlemen. We have quoted many of these testimonies, and must find room for two or three more:

"His style resembles St. Paul's: great zeal and much knowledge of human life are discovered in some of his writings, especially in his work of Apostasy. Dr. Wright seems to have taken many things from hence in his 'Deceit of Sin.' His book on the Hebrews is his greatest work; the 'Means of Understanding the Mind of God in the Scriptures' one of the best; 'Communion with God,' and 'On the Person of Christ,' the most celebrated; on Psalm cxxx. most excellent. His discourses on 'Indwelling Sin,' 'Spiritual-Mindedness,' and 'Mortification of Sin' show great improvement in practical religion."—Dr. Doddridge.

"The name of Owen has been raised to imperial dignity in the theological world."—Bogue and Bennett's Hist. of Dissenters.

"His scholars will be more profound and enlarged, and better furnished, than those of most other writers."—Richard Cecil.

"Indeed, upon the whole, for luminous exposition and powerful defence of scriptural doctrine, for determined enforcement of practical obligation, for skilful anatomy of the self-deceitfulness of the heart, and for a detailed and wise treatment of the diversified exercises of the Christian's heart, he stands probably unrivalled."—Rev. C. Bridges: The Christian Ministry, 42–44.

"Owen as a theologian is a giant indeed! No man can read a page of his writings without learning much."—Rev. Wm. Jay.

"A man of admirable character, correct judgment, and an immense fund of learning."—Rev. James Hervey.

"You will find that in him the learning of Lightfoot, the strength of Charnock, the analysis of Howe, the savour of Leighton, the raciness of Heywood, the glow of Baxter, the copiousness of Barrow, the splendour of Bates, are all combined. We should quickly restore the race of great divines if our candidates were disciplined in such lore."—The late Dr. Hamilton, of Leeds.

"His devotional, and practical, and expository works are an invaluable treasure of divinity. . . . His writings are eminently spiritual, devotional, and edifying. He is full of Biblical learning, sound exposition of doctrine, acuteness, and information. His controversial writings against the Socinians and Papists, on the question of Justification, on the Jewish Questions, Sabbath, &c., are valuable and important. There is hardly any modern controversy that he has not well digested and furnished matter for the defence of the truth. He gives expanded and rich views of the fulness of the gospel."—Bickersteth's C. S., 1844. 268–269.

"Spiritual life is the vital energy which pervades the morality and the practice recommended by Owen. It is not the abstraction of a mystical devotion, like that of Fenelon or Law; nor is it the enthusiastic raptures of a Zinzendorf; but the evangelical piety of Paul and the heavenly affection of John. For every practice, mortification, and feeling, Owen assigns a satisfactory, because a scriptural, reason. The service which he recommends is uniformly a reasonable service; and to every required exertion he brings an adequate and constraining motive. In examining the practical writings of such men as Hall and Taylor and Tillotson, we miss the rich vein of evangelical sentiment and that constant reference to the living principle of Christianity which are never lost sight of in Owen. They abound in excellent directions, in rich materials for self-examination and self-government; but they do not state with sufficient accuracy the connexion between gracious influence and its practical results, from which all that is excellent in human conduct must proceed. They appear as the anatomists of the skin and the extremities: Owen is the anatomist of the heart. He dissects it with remarkable sagacity, tracing out its course and turnings in every path that leads from integrity, and marking the almost imperceptible steps which conduct to atrocious sins."—Orme: Life of Owen.

From thirteen commendatory notices before us of this Commentary, we quote a few lines from two eminent authorities:

"The Commentary is the result of much labour. Dr. Owen has been a patient and indefatigable scholar, and his new works will be received with a general interest."—Bibliotheca Sacra.

"Completeness, precision, and conciseness characterize his commentary."—A. P. PEABODY, D.D.: N. Amer. Rev., Oct. 1857, 568.

Professor Owen is now engaged in the preparation of vol. ii. of his Commentary. In stating the number of copies of his works sold, we have reference only to the demand in the United States. In England many of his volumes have been sold, and his learned labours have elicited the commendation of critics in that country.

Owen, Richard, D.C.L., according to Humboldt, "the greatest anatomist of his age," styled by another eminent authority "The Newton of Natural History," and recognised throughout Europe as "The Cuvier of England," was born at Lancaster, in 1804; served for some time as a midshipman in the British navy; completed his medical education at the University of Edinburgh, in 1825, and in the same year entered as a student of St. Bartholomew's Hospital, where he became prosector in the dissecting-room, with John Abernethy; elected member of the College of Surgeons, 1826, and re-entered the navy as assistant surgeon, but was persuaded by Abernethy to accept the post of colleague of Mr. Clift in the preparation of a catalogue of the Hunterian Museum, in possession of the College of Surgeons; succeeded Sir Charles Bell as Hunterian Professor at the Royal College of Surgeons, 1836; Superintendent of the Natural History Department in the British Museum, 1855, to the present time. Professor Owen still delivers public lectures, and gave a course on Palæontology in 1857, and another on Fossil Birds and Reptiles in 1858, both at the Theatre of the Museum of Practical Geology, Jermyn Street, London. The formation of the catalogues of the Hunterian Museum is undoubtedly one of the greatest achievements of modern science. By the assiduous care of Mr. Clift, the collection had been kept together; but for want of an Index to its treasures it was of comparatively little use.

"Much of Hunter's manuscript had been lost or destroyed, and, in order to make the museum subservient to science, an accurate catalogue was a first necessity. It was to this work that Mr. Owen now applied himself. Although a herculean task, no more fitting field for the development of the genius of Owen could have been found. In order to identify the specimens in the Hunterian collection, he was obliged in a large number of cases to dissect and examine fresh specimens. In this manner volume after volume of the catalogue appeared, till at the end of thirty years the whole was printed,—a work of scarcely inferior importance to the museum itself. This catalogue, which involved the examination of nearly 4000 [3970] specimens, was illustrated by seventy-eight plates. It was thus that Owen earned for himself the reputation of the first of curators, and was able to give complete instructions on this—perhaps the humblest—department of the labours of the naturalist."—Knight's English Cyclopædia, Biography, vol. iv., 1857, 614.

The following is a list of the volumes which Professor Owen has given to the world, with the dates of their publication: 1. Catalogue of the Contents of the Museum of the Royal College of Surgeons: The Preparations of the Natural History in Spirits, 1830, 4to. 2. Memoir on the Pearly Nautilus, [Nautilus Pompilus,] 1832, 4to. 3. Descriptive and Illustrated Catalogue of the Physiological Series of Comparative Anatomy, 5 vols. 4to: vol. i., 1833; ii., 1834; iii., 1836; iv., v., 1840. 4. Odontography; or, A Treatise on the Comparative Anatomy of the Teeth, 1840–45, 2 vols. 4to; also in 2 vols. r. 8vo. 7. Description of the Skeleton of an Extinct Gigantic Sloth, 1842, r. 4to. 8. Catalogue of Calculi and other Animal Secretions, 1842, 4to. 9. Lects. on the Comparative Anatomy and Physiology of the Invertebrate Animals, 1843, 8vo; 2d ed., 1855, 8vo. This ed. has the benefit of new discoveries made since the date of the 1st ed.

"It is sufficient to announce a work on the comparative anatomy of the Invertebrata, by Mr. Owen. Were it necessary to recommend it, we should say that the desideratum it supplies has been long felt by students of natural history, and that no writer of the present day except Mr. Owen could have ventured to approach the subject,—his enlightened researches having made the delightful department of science in which he has created his brilliant reputation legitimately his own, and, indeed, organized into a system an interesting branch of knowledge in which he found only a few scattered and imperfectly-known facts."—Lon. Medical Gazette.

The student of natural history will find it worth his while to compare Mr. Owen's volumes with the Chevalier de la Marck's Histoire Naturelle des Animaux sans Vertèbres, &c., Paris, 1815–22, 7 vols. 8vo: see also a review of the last-named work in Lon. "This masterly manual must be in the hands of every one who takes an interest in the fossil remains of the higher vertebrate animals. The wood-cuts (337 in number) are of incomparable beauty."—Medico-Chirurgical Review, April, 1846.

"The introduction to the present volume must be read with delight by all who feel any interest in the past history of our globe as drawn from organic evidences."—Silliman's American Journal of Science and Art, July, 1846.

"Professor Owen, in that remarkable work in which he gives a condensed view of his profound labours upon the fossil mammalia of the British Islands, invested with a charm peculiarly his own, says," &c.—Westm. Rev., April, 1856: Types of Mankind.

We observe among the announcements of Mr. Murray, of London, for the present year, (1858,) A Manual of Fossil Mammals, by Professor Owen. Whether this Manual is a new edition of No. 13, or a new work, we know not.

"It is perhaps of all the author's works the one of most signal importance for the anatomical student. It extends to about 1000 pages and comprises nearly 6000 specimens."—Lon. Quar. Rev., July, 1853.

21. The Principal Forms of the Skeleton and of the Teeth, 1855, 12mo.

Among Professor Owen's minor publications—minor in point of extent, yet all-important to the student of natural history—are the following: 22. In Todd's Cyclopædia of Anatomy and Physiology, (1836–52, 4 vols. r. 8vo, £10 10s.,) art. Articulata, 1836; art. Cephalopoda, 1836; art. Aves, 1836; art. Acrita, 1836; art. Mammalia, 1847; art. Mollusca, 1847; art. Monotremata, 1847; art. Marsupialia, 1847; art. Teeth; art. Entozoa; and perhaps some other articles. 23. Papers in Edin. Philos. Magazine, vols. xiv., xxv., xxxiii., xxxv., xxxviii., xxxix., xlii., xlvii., xlix., l., &c. 24. Papers in the Reports of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, 1838–57. 25. Papers in the Annals of Natural History. 26. Papers in the Magazine of Natural History. 27. Papers in the Transactions of the Royal Society. 28. Papers in the Proceedings of the Zoological Society, vols. i., iv., v., &c. 29. Papers in the Proceedings of the Geological Society, 1838–57, &c. Especially refer to Description of the Impressions and Footprints of the Protichnites from the Potsdam Sandstone of Canada, 1853; Description of some Species of the Extinct Genus Nesodon, 1853; Description of a Batrachian Fossil from the Coal-Shale of Carslake, 1853. 30. Papers in the publications of the Palæontographical Society, 1849, '51, '53. 31. Papers in the publications of the Linnæan Society. 32. Papers in the publications of the Cambridge Philosophical Society. 33. Papers in the publications of the Medico-Chirurgical Society. 34. Papers in the publications of the Microscopical Society,—of which Professor Owen was one of the founders and the first President. 35. Articles Mollusca, Odontology, Oken, &c., in Encyc. Brit., 8th ed., 1853–60. The titles of many of these papers will be found in the London Quarterly Review, March, 1852, 370–371, n.; and a complete list (to date of publication) of Owen's contributions to scientific literature is presented in the Bibliographia Zoologiæ et Geologiæ, pub. by the Ray Soc., 1848, &c., 4 vols. 8vo. Admirable articles on the labours of this distinguished son of science will be found in the London Quarterly Review for March, 1852, and July, 1853, in the North British Review, May, 1858, and in Knight's English Cyclopædia, Biography, vol. iv. 615–618. See also George MacIlwain's Memoirs of John Abernethy, F.R.S., 1853, 2 vols. p. 8vo. It is not the least of the merits of Prof. Owen that his sedulous and unwearied application to objects of scientific research has not diverted his attention from objects of a more general interest than attaches to those which claim his hours in the dissecting-room, the library, and the scientific convention. His labours as a member of the Commission of Inquiry into the Health of Towns, of the Commission of Inquiry into the Health of the Metropolis, and of the Commission of Inquiry into Smithfield Market, and his active participation in the establishment and operations of the Great Exhibition of the Industry of all Nations in 1851, have added the honourable title of philanthropist to the many distinctions with which Science has delighted to honour her favourite son. In 1848 he received the Royal Medal, and in 1851 the Copley Medal of the Royal Society. Oxford has conferred upon him the degree of D.C.L., and Edinburgh that of LL.D. The King of Prussia selected him in 1851 to succeed the celebrated Oersted as Chevalier of the Order of Merit. Other foreign countries have united in acknowledgments of his eminent success in promoting the developments of science by which all have profited; and at home he is honoured by a complimentary pension from his Government, and her Majesty has granted him a residence in one of the royal houses in Richmond Park. In 1836 Professor Owen married the only daughter of his fellow-curator, Mr. Clift, by whom he has a son living.

"exhibit his easy command of vast learning, his splendid felicity of illustration,—the results of the most patient and accurate investigation and of the deepest thought."—Lon. Quar. Rev., March, 1852.

"Cuvier, indeed, with an instinctive prescience, asks, 'Why should not Natural History one day also have its Newton?' and the best proof of the reasonableness of that question we hold to be the success which has attended the last researches of Cuvier's English successor, justly styled by Humboldt 'le plus grand anatomiste de son siècle.'"—Ibid., Jan. 1853.

"We believe that the most competent judges allow that the celebrated Cuvier has not left any one more fitted to appreciate his excellence, or who has more contributed to extend that science of which the baron was so distinguished a leader, than Professor Owen."—MacIlwain's Memoirs of Abernethy, 1853, ii. 242.

Mr. MacIlwain, himself a surgeon, gives us the correct version of a story which will bear repetition:

"A seafaring man brought a piece of bone, about three or four inches in length.—as he said, from New Zealand.—and offered it for sale at one or two museums, and, amongst others at the College of Surgeons. We shall not here detain the reader by telling all that happened. These things are often brought with intent to deceive and with false allegations. Most of those to whom the bone was submitted dismissed it as worthless, or manifested their incredulity: amongst other guesses, some insinuated that they had seen bones very like it at the London Tavern, regarding it, in fact, as part of an old marrow-bone, to which it bore, on a superficial view, some resemblance. At length it was brought to Professor Owen, who, having looked at it carefully, thought it right to investigate it more narrowly; and, after much consideration, he ventured to pronounce his opinion. This opinion from almost anybody else would have been perhaps only laughed at; for, in the first place, he said that the bone (big enough, as we have seen, to suggest that it belonged to an ox) had belonged to a bird; but, before people had had time to recover from their surprise or other sensation occasioned by this announcement, they were greeted by another assertion yet more startling,—namely, that it had been a bird without wings.

"Now, we happen to know a good deal of this story, and that the incredulity and doubt with which the opinion was received was too great for a time even for the authority of Professor Owen entirely to dispel. But mark the truthfulness of a real science; contemplate the exquisite beauty and accuracy of relation in nature! By-and-by a whole skeleton was brought over to this country,—when the opinion of the professor was converted int an established fact."—Ibid.

"We well remember," remarks a writer in the London Quarterly Review, "seeing this fragment of the shaft of a femur when it first arrived, and hearing the opinion of the Professor [Owen] as to the bird to which it must have belonged. He took, in our presence, a piece of paper, and drew the outline of what he conceived to be the complete bone. The fragment, from which alone he deduced his conclusions, was six inches in length and five inches and a half in its smallest circumference: both extremities had been broken off. When a perfect bone arrived and was laid on the paper, it fitted the outline exactly."—March, 1852, 402–410.

"Here we may notice what seems to us an outstanding feature of Owen's works. He is peculiarly successful in the use he makes of hypothesis and of generalization. The progress of his favourite sciences during the last ten years bears testimony to this. Skill in making hypothesis a stepping-stone to the bringing out of facts and the discovery of general laws marks the possession of the highest type of mind. . . . But it is more than time that we should indicate what constitutes the main element in Professor Owen's greatness. We mean his researches and discoveries in comparative anatomy. These form his chief claim to the admiration and gratitude of the civilized world. . . . In conclusion, were we tempted to give, after the manner of many of our old authors, diagrammatic expression to our estimate of Owen's works, we would arrange their titles in the form of a pyramid, and hang a scroll over them all, bearing this legend: THE TESTIMONY OF COMPARATIVE ANATOMY AND ZOOLOGY TO THE MANIFOLD WISDOM OF GOD."—N. Brit. Rev., May, 1858.

Owen, Richard, M.D., the youngest son of Robert Owen, of N. Lanark, was born in Scotland, Jan. 1810, and came to the U.S. in 1827, after having, with his brother David Dale Owen, enjoyed the educational advantages of Hofwyl, Switzerland, and Dr. Ure's lectures in Glasgow. Chiefly to improve his health, he carried on a farm and flouring-mill for some years, and in 1847 went to Mexico as captain in one of the new regiments. At the close of the war he joined one of the geological corps of his brother, which spent the season on the north shore of Lake Superior. In 1849 he was appointed to the Chair of Natural Science in the Western Military Institute, which ultimately united with the University of Nashville; and he filled that position until 1858, when he resigned and removed to New Harmony, Indiana, for the purpose of founding an agricultural college near that place. In 1856 he wrote and in the spring of 1857 published Key to the Geology of the Globe: an Essay designed to show that the present Geographical, Hydrographical, and Geological Structures observed on the Earth's Crust were the Result of Forces acting according to Fixed Demonstrable Laws analogous to those governing the Development of Organic Bodies; illustrated by Maps and Diagrams, Nashville, 1857, 8vo, pp. 256.

"The book breathes throughout the spirit of a sincere lover of and seeker after truth, and of one whose researches are conducted under a profound sense of the Divine Being and Providence and with an earnest desire to render praise to God and benefit to man."—A. P. Peabody, D.D.: N. Amer. Rev., July, 1857, 276.

"It has stirred the great brain of the mighty Humboldt himself, and given a new direction to its ponderous but accurate machinery. . . . It is but the foreshadowing of the coming labours of the intellect that inspired it. . . . Never was there a man of warmer and kindlier feelings. In all the relations of life the bland, conscientious, frank, and elegant gentleman."—Nashville Jour. of Med. and Surg., Sept. 1858.

We have before us nine other commendatory notices of this work. Dr. Owen concurs with Humboldt, Prichard, &c. in asserting the unity of the human race. He has also pub. A Lecture in behalf of the Mount Vernon Association, and many papers on education, geography, agriculture, and agricultural colleges, in the Western periodicals.

Owen, Robert. Hypermnestra; a Tragedy, 1703, 4to.

Owen, Robert, b. May 14, 1771, at Newton, Montgomeryshire, North Wales, at eighteen years of age became partner in a cotton-mill in London, and subsequently commenced the Chorlton Mills, near Manchester. In 1801 he married the daughter of Mr. David Dale, proprietor of the Lanark (now New Lanark) Cotton-Mills, and shortly afterwards became manager of this extensive establishment, which he conducted with great ability and eminent success. In 1825, his connexion with New Lanark having terminated, he purchased from a German colony from Pennsylvania, under Frederick Rapp, a tract of land on the Wabash, in Posey county, Indiana, and founded the settlement of New Harmony, which proved a failure; and in 1827 Mr. Owen returned to England. Since that period he has been equally unsuccessful in his various enterprises,—the communities at New Orbiston (1827) and at Tytherley, the Labour Exchange at London, the Mexican project, (1828,) and the effort at Parliamentary representation, (1857.) He has for a long time past resided in London, where he edits the "Millennial Gazette,"—a publication designed to show that men might be happier by uniting their interests than by carrying out the present competition-system. Within the last few months this zealous philanthropist has given to the world the first volume of The Life of Robert Owen, written by Himself; with Selections from his Writings and Correspondence, 1857. Reviewed in Lon. Athenæum, Dec. 26, 1857. To this work, to Robert Owen's Address to the Human Race on his Eighty-Fourth Birthday, with his Last Legacy to the Governors and Governed of All Nations, 1854, and to the authorities cited at the conclusion of this article, we refer the reader for further information respecting a man who has filled a large space in the world's eye for almost the allotted threescore years and ten of men's pilgrimage. Mr. Owen's publications are: 1. A New View of Society; in Four Essays on the Formation of the Human Character, Lon., 1813; 3d ed., 1817, 8vo; N. York, 1825, 12mo. Reviewed in Edin. Rev., xxxii. 453. See also Lon. Gent. Mag., Dec. 1846, 568. 2. Observations on the Effects of the Manufacturing System, 1815, 8vo; 2d ed., 1817, 8vo; 3d ed. pub. 3. Address to the Inhabitants of New Lanark, Lon., 1816, 8vo; 3d ed., 1817, 8vo. 4. Tracts Relative to the New Society, 1817. 5. Two Memorials in behalf of the Working-Classes. 6. "I have happened in the course of my life," remarks Robert Southey, "to know three men each wholly possessed with a single object of paramount importance,—Clarkson, Dr. Bell, and Owen of Lanark, whom I have only lately known. Such men are not only eminently useful, but eminently happy also: they live in an atmosphere of their own, which must be more like that of the third heaven than of this every-day earth upon which we toil and moil."—Letter to C. H. Townsend, Keswick, Feb. 16, 1817: Southey's Life and Corresp., chap. xxii.

When Southey published his Colloquies on Society, he treats Mr. Owen with marked respect,—to which Lord Macaulay thus refers:

"He [Southey] seems to have an instinctive antipathy for calm, moderate men, for men who shun extremes and who render reasons. He has treated Mr. Owen of Lanark, for example, with infinitely more respect than he has shown to Mr. Hallam or to Dr. Lingard; and this for no reason that we can discover except that Mr. Owen is more unreasonably and hopelessly in the wrong than any speculator of our time."—Edin. Rev., Jan. 1830, 533, and in Macaulay's Crit. and Histor. Essays, 1854, i. 213.

"In talking of some of Lanark Owen's speeches, &c. Talbot said that, though he builds in parallelograms, he argues in circles."—Moore's Memoirs, 1853, vi. 242.

"Suppose even that a whole nation could be induced to adopt the plan of Mr. Owen,—and a most lamentable event it would be; because it would be reducing society to a chaos, out of which it needs must struggle to elevate itself the very next moment after its reduction to it.—would not that nation insist upon its joint property against the claims which another nation might set up? In a word, can we for a moment possibly imagine mankind without property? All that fanciful minds have dreamed of a supposed golden age extends no farther than to very confined limits."—Lieber's Manual of Political Ethics, Part 1, 2d ed., 1847, 114–115.

"It is curious to see in every age, from Plato to Robert Owen, the Utopia of theorists coming forth in one strange shape or another,—the notion of altering human nature instead of managing it as it is; while the practical men,—from Solon and Pericles to Cromwell and Napoleon,—taking mankind as they are, rule them and rule by them, and changes the destinies of mankind."—Portfolio of a Man of the World, Jan. 4, 1823: Lon. Gent. Mag., 1846.

"Whatever may be thought of the opinions he holds, there can be no doubt of his extreme benevolence, his moral integrity, nor of his business-talents, more especially as displayed in his early life."—English Cyc., Biog., iv. 1857, 619.

"No doubt can be entertained that he effected a vast amount of good, and that he probably would have accomplished more had he aimed at less."—Lon. Athen., 1857, 1618. D. 1858. See Packard's Life of Owen, 1866.

Owen, Robert Dale, eldest son of the preceding, was b. in 1801, at Glasgow, Scotland, and spent three years at the celebrated educational institution at Hofwyl, Switzerland. Among the fruits of his studies was a small work on education, pub. when the author was still a youth. In 1825 he accompanied his father to New Harmony, Indiana, and there edited (partly in conjunction with Madame D'Arusmont, see p. 476, ante, and Mr. H. D. Robinson, now an agriculturist of New Jersey) The New Harmony Gazette, afterwards entitled The Free Inquirer, New Harmony and New York, Oct. 1825–Dec. 1834, 9 vols. 4to. He was for several years in the Legislature of Indiana, and two terms in the National Congress; and, having introduced the bill for establishing the Smithsonian Institution, he was appointed one of its regents. In 1853 he was sent to Naples as Minister from the United States, and remained there for five years. His publications are: 1. On Education, (supra.) 2. Popular Tracts, N. York, 1830, 12mo. 3. Moral Physiology, 1831, 12mo. 4. Pocahontas; a Drama, 1837, 12mo. 5. Hints on Public Architecture, 1849, r. 4to; 113 Illustrations. 6. A Treatise on the Construction of Plank Roads, 1856, 12mo. 7. Packard, Frederick A., LL.D., b. in Marlborough, Middlesex co., Mass., Sept. 25, 1794; graduated at Harvard College, 1814; read law at Northampton, Mass., where he reported and published, in 1816, the remarkable case of Commonwealth vs. Bowen; practised law at Springfield, Mass., 1817–29, and there edited The Hampden Federalist for ten years; removed to Philadelphia in 1829, and assumed, and retained at his death, Nov. 11, 1867, the editorial charge of the publications of the American Sunday-School Union. In July, 1849, he was elected President of the Girard College for Orphans, in Philadelphia, but declined the appointment. Between 1829 and June, 1867, Mr. Packard edited more than 2000 different works issued by the Amer. S. S. Union in their regular series, and wrote or compiled more than 40 of this number; edited The Sunday-School Magazine, The Sunday-School Journal, and The Youth's Penny Gazette; prepared, 1829 to 1835 inclusive, and from 1838 to 1867, many of the Society's annual reports; published tracts and occasional papers on Sunday-school subjects; pamphlets on educational and other subjects, including a Letter to the Rt. Rev. Bishop Potter, of Pennsylvania, on Christian Union, 1850, pp. 70; and A Reply to an Article in Forbes's Psychological Journal, (London,) on Diseases of the Mind, 1850, pp. 48; edited 11 of the 13 vols. of the (Phila.) Journal of Prison Discipline, and contributed to the other two volumes; issued several pamphlets on the same subject; and contributed papers to the Princeton Review, the New Englander, and other periodicals. Among the most important of his publications, all of which lack his own name, are: 1. The Union Bible Dictionary, Phila., 1837, pp. 648, 18mo; sale to 1855, 105,875 copies; 2d ed., improved and enlarged, with new engravings, 1855, pp. 691, 18mo; sale to Aug. 1858, 33,000 copies; last ed., 1865. 2. The Teacher Taught, 1839, pp. 396, 12mo; new ed., 1861; reprinted in London, under the title of The Sunday-School Teacher's Hand-Book. The sale of The Teacher Taught has been very large. 3. 7. The Daily Public School of the United States,.1866, 8vo. A vigorous protest against the inefficiency of the system. See Amer. Presby. and Theolog. Rev., April, 1867. He was a man of untiring zeal and energy, estimable in all the relations of life, and, in the highest sense of the phrase, a national benefactor.

"It is but a few months short of fifty years since I first taught a class in the Sunday-school, (never having been a pupil;) and for nearly forty of those years my DAILY thoughts and labours have been employed on nothing else but the Sunday-school,—its improvement and its extension. No lawyer or doctor could be more exclusively devoted to his profession than I have been to the interests of Sunday-schools."—F. A. Pace, Paicey, or Pacey, Richard, 1482?–1532, a native of Winchester or of its vicinity, Preb. of Southwell, 1510; Preb. of York and Archdeacon of Dorset, 1514; Treasurer of Lichfield, 1516; Archdeacon of Colchester, 1518–19; Preb. of London, 1519; Dean of London, 1519; Dean of Exeter, 1522. Pace was confidentially employed in state affairs by Henry VIII. and Cardinal Wolsey, but had the courage to protest, by a letter to the royal suitor, against the king's marriage with the widow of his brother, Prince Arthur. Leland and Stow speak of him in high terms; Sir Thomas More greatly admired him; and Erasmus wrote more letters to him than to any other of his correspondents. Among his publications, some of which are translations from Greek into Latin, &c., are: 1. De Fructv qui ex Doctrina percipitvr, liber, Basil, 1517. Dedicated to Dr. Colet. 2. Oratio, &c., Paris, 1518, 4to. 3. Epistolæ ad Erasmum, &c., 1520. These epistles are part of the Epistolæ aliquot Eruditorum. See Athen. Oxon., Dodd's Ch. Paine, Robert, D.D., b. in N. Carolina, 1799, emigrated to Tennessee when fourteen years of age; received a liberal education; became a Methodist itinerant preacher; President of La Grange College, Alabama, for 16 years; ordained Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1846; resides at present (1858) in Mississippi. Author of a small polemical work on Hopkinsianism, and is about to publish, at the request of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, a work, in 2 vols., on the Life and Times of Bishop McKendree. See N. Amer. Rev., xlv. 504.

Paine, Robert Treat, 1773–1811, a son of Judge Robert Treat Paine, and a native of Taunton, Massachusetts, graduated with great distinction at Harvard College in 1792, and subsequently divided his attention between the theatres, the practice of the law, the editor's table, and the composition of poetry. From October, 1794, to 1797, he owned and edited The Federal Orrery, a semi-weekly, established by his own enterprise. Among his publications are: The Invention of Letters, a Poem delivered in Cambridge on the Day of the Annual Commencement, Bost., 1795, 8vo; The Ruling Passion, an Occasional Poem, spoken at Cambridge before the Phi Beta Kappa Society, 1797, 4to; an Oration, July 17, 8vo, 1799; Eulogy on Washington, Newburyport, 1800, 8vo. His contemporaries paid well for his poetry: $1500 for the Invention of Letters; $1200 for the Ruling Passion; $750 for the song, of seven stanzas, entitled Adams and Liberty. The poet's Christian name was originally Thomas; but, as this was also the designation of a famous polemical writer, not distinguished for his admiration of Christianity, the subject of our notice obtained the legislative sanction to take the name of his father. A collective ed. of his Works in Verse and Prose, with a Sketch of his Life, was pub. by Charles Prentiss, in 1812, Boston, 8vo. This vol. was reviewed in the General Repertory and Review, by Willard Phillips. A later biographical notice of Mr. Paine, in Dr. Allen's American Biographical Dictionary, was reviewed unfavourably by a literary gentleman of Boston, (Sigma, i.e. Lucius M. Sargent,) in the Transcript of that city, in June and July, 1857.

"A prose writer and a poet; one whose language, two or three times during his life, was Inspiration. . . . We think very well of his genius, but humbly of his understanding. The song 'Adams and Liberty' was written by him. We know of no other tolerable song—except one by Dr. Percival—that ever was written by an American."—JOHN NEAL: American Writers, No. V.: Blackw. Mag., Feb. 1825, 198.

"Robert Treat Paine of Boston, who fell so early and so much lamented, gave promise of high attainment in the line of lyric and patriotic odes, some of his effusions of that sort, called forth on particular occasions, not having been since surpassed. . . . Mr. Paine—had he known and improved his powers—would have proved a poet in the high and appropriate sense of the word."—REV. TIMOTHY FLINT: The Lit. of the U. States: Lon. Athen., 1835, 817.

"There was no freshness in Paine's writings; his subjects, his characters, his thoughts, were all commonplace and familiar. His mind was fashioned by books, and not by converse with the world. He had a brilliant fancy, and a singular command of language; but he was never content to be simple and natural. He endeavoured to be magnificent and striking; he was perpetually searching for conceits and extravagances; and, in the multiplicity of his illustrations and ornaments, he was unintelligible and tawdry. From no other writer could so many instances of the false sublime be selected. He never spoke to the heart in its own language."—Griswold's Poets and Poetry of America, 16th ed., 1855, 76.

"Robert Treat Paine was the poet of his day, and in that day enthusiastically admired. I remember hearing what were thought the great sums of money paid for his poems. He was then praised beyond his merits, and now his actual merit is forgotten."—THEOPHILUS PARSONS: Memoir of Chief-Justice Parsons, 1859, 136.

Paine, Thomas, d. 1757, aged about 60, grandfather of Robert Treat Paine, the poet, was for several years a minister of Weymouth, and subsequently a merchant of Boston. 1. Ordination Serm., 1719. 2. Lect. on Original Sin, 1724. 3. Lect. on Earthquakes, 1728.

Paine, Thomas, Jan. 29, 1736–June 8, 1809, a native of Thetford, county of Norfolk, England, was a son of a stay-maker, a member of the Society of Friends or Quakers, and followed his father's occupation, first at home and subsequently in London, Dover, and Sandwich, Kent. At the last-named place he married, in 1760, the daughter of an exciseman; obtained himself a place in the Excise; became an assistant schoolmaster in London; again entered the Excise Office, from which he was dismissed in 1774; made the acquaintance of Benjamin Franklin, and was by him encouraged to emigrate to America; settled at Philadelphia early in 1775, and became editor of Aitken's Pennsylvania Magazine. In 1776 he served as a volunteer in the army, and in January of the same year, at the suggestion of Dr. Rush, he wrote and pub. (Phila., 8vo) his Common Sense,—for which the Legislature of Pennsylvania voted him £500. The University of the same province made him M.A. The American Philosophical Society elected him a member; and in April, 1777, by a vote of Congress, the Committee of Foreign Affairs secured his services as clerk.

The new secretary, however, made so liberal a use of his official secrets in an excited controversy with Silas Deane, that the committee became convinced that the pen was held by too "ready" a "writer," and Mr. Paine lost his situation in January, 1779. The successful stroke of Common Sense, of which the sale was not less than 100,000 copies, (also repub., with omissions, London, 1776,) was followed by the eighteen numbers of The American Crisis, (Phila., Dec. 19, 1776–April 19, 1783; Lon., 1819, 8vo,) which no doubt tended to keep alive the patriotic spirit of the Revolutionists. In 1780 he was appointed Clerk to the Assembly of Pennsylvania, and in the next year accompanied Colonel Laurens to France for the purpose of aiding in the negotiation of a loan, which was satisfactorily arranged; and, on Paine's retiring in 1785, he was rewarded by a donation from Congress of $5000 and the confiscated estate of Frederic Davoc, a royalist, near New Rochelle, in New York, consisting of 500 acres of good land and a large stone house. In 1787 he again went to France, and made an unsuccessful effort to enlist the patronage of the Academy of Sciences on behalf of a plan for the construction of iron bridges. Determined to carry out his project, he formed an unfortunate connection with an iron-founder at Rotherham, Yorkshire. In 1791 he published at London the first part, and in 1792 the second part, of his Rights of Man,—intended as an answer to Burke's Reflections on the French Revolution. The second part of Paine's vigorous production was proceeded against as "a false, scandalous, malicious, and seditious libel," and the author, although eloquently defended by the Hon. Thomas (afterwards Lord) Erskine, was declared guilty. Escaping to France, he took his seat as a member of the French National Convention, to which he had been elected by the department of Calais; and when the great question of the life or death of Louis XVI. was to be decided, Paine voted for his imprisonment during the war, and his subsequent banishment to America. Towards the close of 1793 he was excluded from the Convention as a foreigner, (in fact, he had been duly naturalized;) and in December of that year, by order of Robespierre, he was committed to the Luxembourg, and remained a prisoner for eleven months.

The first part of his Age of Reason, finished shortly before his arrest, was committed to the custody of Joel Barlow, and pub. in London and Paris in March, 1794, 8vo, (dated Luxembourg, 8th Pluviose;) the second part, composed in prison, was published in Paris and London, Dec. 1795, 8vo. A third part was also published. New ed. of the whole, enlarged by Carlile, 1818. In 1796 Paine excited deep disgust among many of his American admirers, by his insolent Letter to George Washington, President of the United States of America, on Affairs Public and Private, (Phila., 8vo; Lon., 1797, 8vo,) which was answered by Cobbett in his Political Censor, Dec. 1796. In 1802, at his own request to visit America in a government vessel, President Jefferson offered him a passage in the sloop-of-war "Maryland," and he arrived at Baltimore in October of that year. He was not without companions: his first wife had died about a year after marriage; his second had parted from him after three years' experience of wedded life; and he now brought with him to America Madame Bonneville, the wife of a French bookseller, and her two sons. A change of scene and associates worked no reformation in the disgraceful habits which had long distinguished him and his chosen friends in London and Paris. Intemperate, tyrannical, licentious, and profane, a torment to himself and a terror to his household, he left the world without repentance, and exchanged the horrors of a death-bed devoid of hope, for the infamy of a dishonoured grave. In 1819 Mr. Cobbett is supposed (some doubt was expressed as to the authenticity of the relics) to have carried his bones to England; a good office, for which Mr. Cobbett (p. 399, ante) has already received our thanks. See Ode on the Bones of the Immortal Thomas Paine, newly translated from America to England by the no less Immortal William Cobbett, Esq., Lon., 1819, 4to. By Thomas Rodd, Senior. See, also, Notes and Quer., 1868. An edition of Paine's Political Writings, which exhibit great vigour and fluency of style, not unmixed with the most mischievous extravagances of doctrine, was pub. in 1856, Boston, 2 vols. 8vo, (again, N. York, 1860, 12mo,) and in the same year, to the great discredit of the American press, his miserable and absurd so-called Theological (?) Writings were reissued in the same city, in 1 vol. 8vo, (again, N. York, 1860, 12mo.) Of the fairness of the criticisms on the Bible contained in The Age of Reason, and of the candour of the critic, some opinion may be formed from an extract from the author's account of the circumstances under which the first part of this production was composed:

"I had, besides, neither Bible nor Testament to refer to, though I was writing against both, nor could I procure any, [in Paris;] notwithstanding which, I have produced a book that no Bible-believer, though writing at his ease, and with a library of Church Books about him, can refute."—Pref. to the Second Part of the Age of Reason.

How far the author was indebted to Joshua Oldfield's Essay towards the Improvement of Reason, published in 1707, we are unable to decide.

"I have now," remarks Paine, at the close of his labours,—"I have now gone through the Bible as a man would go through a wood with an axe on his shoulder to fell trees. Here they lie; and the Priests, if they can, may replant them. They may, perhaps, stick them in the ground, but they will never make them grow."

The manuscript of the first part of the work was submitted to Dr. Franklin, and his advice to the author has been often quoted. We give a brief extract:

"I would advise you, therefore, not to attempt unchaining the tiger, but to burn this piece before it is seen by any other person, whereby you will save yourself a great deal of mortification from the enemies it may raise you, and perhaps a good deal of regret and repentance. If men are so wicked with religion, what would they be without it?"—B. Franklin.

These words proved indeed prophetic. The "regret and repentance" were thus expressed to an infidel admirer, who was congratulating the author on the publication of the work, shortly after Paine's return to America in 1802:

"'I am sorry that that work ever went to press. I wrote it more for my own amusement, and to see what I could do, than with any design of benefiting the world. I would give worlds,' said he, with great emphasis, 'had I them at my command, had "The Age of Reason" never been published! No, sir; I regret the publication of that work exceedingly. It can never do the world any good, and its sarcastic style will doubtless lead thousands to esteem lightly the only book of correct morals that has ever blessed the world. I would advise you,' said Paine, turning his eye to meet Mr. K.'s, 'not to read that work.'"

We had intended to prove the folly and impiety of this man by the testimony of other witnesses; but what more is needed than this confutation from his own mouth? "I wrote it for my own amusement"! Well saith the Wise King, "As a madman who casteth firebrands, arrows, and death, so is the man that deceiveth his neighbour, and saith, Am not I in sport?"

"If any thing can exceed the mischievous intention of this attack on revealed religion, and which certainly produced very alarming effects on the minds of many of the lower classes, among whom it was liberally circulated, it was the ignorance of which his answerers have convicted him of every species of knowledge necessary for a discussion of the kind."—Chalmers's Biog. Dict., xxiv. 26.

Gilbert Wakefield, in his notice of the Second Part of the Age of Reason and its author, declares that "His excess of folly will be lamented by all his friends not estranged, like himself, from shame and modesty, and his enemies will read his outrageous vaunts, united to such an excess of ignorance and stupor, with that pleasure which results from a just expression of mingled abhorrence, derision, and contempt. For my part, his unprecedented infatuation almost strikes me dumb with amazement. I am not acquainted with such a compound of vanity and ignorance as Thomas Paine, in the records of literary history."

Of course the great cause of human freedom was for a time injuriously affected by such a melancholy exhibition of folly and dishonesty on the part of one of its most prominent champions. The wits of the American republic were not idle on the occasion. An epigrammatist of the day embodied the popular sentiment in the couplet,—

"Here lies Tom Paine, who wrote in liberty's defence,
But in his 'Age of Reason' lost his 'Common Sense.'"

"It must soon sink into infamy," predicts William Linn, "and carry his own name along with it. There is nothing new in the performance, save the bold and indecent manner. Indeed, it is provoking to see the Christian religion, after having withstood the roarings of the lion, insulted by the brayings of the ass."—Discourse on the Fall of Anti-Christ.

"The time has long since gone by," remarks a modern reviewer, "when the name of Paine would throw good and pious men into paroxysms of indignation. No one nowadays reads 'The Age of Reason,' such is the entire and contemptuous oblivion into which it has fallen; nor would any one take the trouble to mutilate a copy of Paine's Works, as was once the fashion, by cutting out his pages of loathsome infidelity."—William B. Reed: Life and Character of Thomas Paine: N. Amer. Rev., July, 1843, 1–58;—an excellent paper, q. v.

We can go a little farther than this. It sounds somewhat oddly to place the author of The Age of Reason in the ranks of Christian propagandists: yet we know of at least two instances where the perusal of his work was the means of persuading the reader of the truth of the doctrine of the inspiration of the Scriptures. Let us briefly refer to one of these cases of unexpected conversion.

At a dinner at Dr. Nicholas Romayne's,—the narrator is our valued friend Dr. John W. Francis, of New York, one of Paine's contemporaries,—

"Pintard chose the occasion to express to Paine his opinion of his infidel writings. 'I have read and re-read,' said Pintard, 'your Age of Reason, and any doubts which I before entertained of the truth of Revelation have been removed by your logic. Yes, sir, your very arguments against Christianity have convinced me of its truth.' 'Well, then,' answered Paine, with a sarcastic glance, 'I may return to my couch to-night with the consolation that I have made at least one Christian.'"—Dr. Francis: Old New York, ed. 1858, 140.

We acknowledge that the result of the examination of the arguments of infidel writers, from the learned sophisms of the aristocratic recluse of Cherbury, to the shallow ribaldry of the stay-maker of Thetford, has had the same effect on our mind which Pintard avowed to Paine himself: a thorough conviction of the inspiration, excellency, and inestimable value of the Holy Scriptures. This is our testimony; and may it remain as our epitaph long after we have been summoned to our account before "the Judge of all the earth"!

A book so easily confuted would of course not remain long unanswered: Bishop Watson's and Thomas Scott's responses are now the best-known; but we may add to these names those of J. Auchincloss, Elias Boudinot, John Disney, Samuel Drew, J. P. Estlin, David Levi, W. Macneil, Thomas Meek, Michael Nash, Uzal Ogden, John Padman, Wm. Patten, J. Priestley, T. Shann, David Simpson, Thomas O. Summers, Robert Thomson, Mr. Tytler, W. Wait, G. Wakefield, E. Wallace, and T. Williams, and still leave the list unexhausted.

When Robert Hall was asked his opinion of the Age of Reason, he replied, "My opinion of it, sir? Why, sir, it is a mouse nibbling at the wing of an archangel."

As a political writer, Paine has already come under our notice in our life of Sir James Mackintosh, (pp. 1179, 1180, ante.)

We have no disposition to undervalue his services to the cause of American liberty; but it is only just to say that these services have been vastly overrated. To imagine that a writer who had never seen the American soil before the year 1775, and whose first political publication preceded the Declaration of Independence by only six months,—whose emigration to America had been suggested by Franklin in Paris, and whose Common Sense was originated by Rush in Philadelphia,—to dignify this tardy champion with the title of an Apostle of American Liberty would be to employ a figure too bold for chronology and too ludicrous for fiction. In fact, in no country in the world were the mischievous extravagancies already referred to, so startlingly obtruded in The Rights of Man, more vehemently condemned than they were then, are now, and we trust ever will be, in the United States of America.

Jeremy Bentham declares that

"The theory laid down in the 'Declaration of the Rights of Man' had, in a great measure, produced the crimes of the Reign of Terror;—that none but an eye-witness could imagine the horrors of a state of society in which comments on that Declaration were put forth by men with no food in their bellies, with rags on their backs, and pikes in their hands."—Sophismes Anarchiques: Lord Macaulay's Review of Mackintosh's Hist. of the Revolution in England in 1688: Essays, Lon., 1854, ii. 64.

"His strong coarse sense and bold dogmatism," says the biographer of Mackintosh, "conveyed in an instinctively popular style, made Paine a dangerous enemy always; but more particularly at a period when the great masses of the middle and lower orders of both countries were to be appealed to."—Life of Sir James Mackintosh, vol. i. chap. ii.

"His bold speculations and fierce invectives," remarks Sir James himself, "indicated the approach of civil confusion."—Life, &c., vol. ii. chap. iii.

"It seems," exclaimed the indignant Burke, "that all which the boasted wisdom of our ancestors had laboured to bring to perfection for six or seven centuries, is nearly, or altogether, matched in six or seven days, at the leisure hours and sober intervals of citizen Thomas Paine."—Letters on a Regicide Peace: Works of Edmund Burke, ed. 1852, v. 457.

"Paine," says Professor Smyth of Cambridge, "is a writer as distinguished for the superficial view which he takes of the subjects on which he writes, as for the effrontery with which he proposes and the ability with which he illustrates his opinions. Indeed, I know no argument so strong against all the democracy which he espouses, as the very success of his own works."—Lects. on Mod. Hist., Lect. XXXV. See also Lect. XXXII.

"No man can reason but from what he knows. Paine knew but little, and is therefore only to be trusted within his own sphere of observation."—John Horne Tooke: Recollec. by S. Rogers, 1859, 128.

Among the answers to Paine's Rights of Man (of which, it is said, more than 1,500,000 copies were circulated in England, and many French copies were sold in France) we may notice Thomas Hearne's, Lon., 1793, 8vo; John Adams's, Dubl., 1793, 8vo; Mackenzie's, Phila., 1796, 8vo; Boothby's Observations; and A Protest against the Rights of Man, Lon., 1792, 8vo. C. Hammond, Medium, N. York, 1852, p. 8vo. This is a department of literature—the Spiritual Classics—into which we do not profess to have carried our researches (otherwise than bibliographically) to any considerable extent. We should not omit to notice, as a work displaying considerable acuteness, Paine's Decline and Fall of the English System of Finance, 14th ed., Lon., 1796, 8vo; 2d Amer. ed., from a London copy of the Paris ed., N. York, 1796, 12mo. See, also, Shann, T., No. 1; Thomson, Robert, No. 2.

We have stated on a previous page that this lady is one of the many to whom has been ascribed the authorship of The Whole Duty of Man. Dr. Hickes, in the Dedication of his Anglo-Saxon Grammar to Sir John Pakington, favours this impression, and Sir James Mackintosh (Edin. Review, xliv. 4, n.) adopts this theory; but see the subject treated at some length in our article HAWKINS, W. B., p. 803, ante. Bishop Fell gives the highest character of Lady Pakington. Paley, William, D.D., 1743–1805, a native of Peterborough, graduated at Christ's College, Cambridge, 1763, being Senior Wrangler; took holy orders, and in 1766 was elected Fellow of his College, and soon after became one of its tutors,—delivering lectures on morals, metaphysics, and the Greek Testament; Rector of Musgrove, Westmoreland, 1775; Vicar of Dalston, Cumberland, 1776, to which was soon added the living of Appleby, Westmoreland; Preb. of Carlisle, 1780; Archdeacon of Carlisle, 1782; Chancellor of Carlisle, 1785; Preb. of St. Paul's, 1793; presented by the Bishop of Durham (Dr. Barrington) to the valuable rectory of Bishop Wearmouth in 1795, and retained this post for the rest of his life. When his father took him to college, he predicted that he would become a "very great man;" declaring that he had the clearest head he had ever met with in his life. This good head, however, seems, by the confession of its owner, to have been for a long time turned to very little account.

"I spent," he tells us, "the first two years of my under-graduateship happily, but unprofitably. I was constantly in society, —where we were not immoral, but idle, and rather expensive. At the commencement of my third year, however, after having left the usual party at rather a late hour in the evening, I was awakened at five in the morning, by one of my companions, who stood at my bedside, and said, 'Paley, I have been thinking what a fool you are! I could do nothing profitably were I to try, and can afford the life I lead: you could do every thing, and cannot afford it. I have had no sleep during the whole night on account of these reflections, and I am now come solemnly to inform you that if you persist in your indolence I must renounce your society.' I was so struck with the visit and the visitor, that I lay in bed a great part of the day and formed my plan."

The excellence of this "plan," and the conscientious devotion with which it was adhered to, are best illustrated by the four important productions which have conferred celebrity on the author's name; viz.: 1. The Principles of Moral and Political Philosophy, 1785, 4to; 1786, 4to; 1790, 2 vols. 8vo. Many edits. 14th ed., 1803, 2 vols. 8vo. With Addit. Disserts. and Notes, by Alexander Bain, Dec. 1852, 12mo. See Lon. Athen., 1853, 41. Last Lon. ed., with Annotations by Richard Whately, D.D., 1859, r. 8vo. See Athen., May 7, 1859, 615. See, also, Analysis of, 1822, 8vo; Analysis of, by Thos. Coward, 1824, 18mo; Epitomes of, by Rowe, 12mo; with Questions, by Frost, 18mo; by Valpy, with Questions by R. W. Green; Lectures on Paley, 8vo; ARROWSMITH, R. G.; SMITH, WILLIAM, No. 3. The title of this work is hardly justified by its contents:

"The work of Dr. Paley embraces the Principles of Political as well as Moral Philosophy; but, able and judicious as in many respects that portion of the book is, the space allotted to it, being little more than one-third of two moderate-sized and widely-printed octavo volumes, shows how far it must be from explaining the whole even of the principles of the science. Of Political Economy it has almost nothing; it only gives the principles of government in their most general form; it makes no application of them to any constitution but that of England; it derives from the constitution of no other country any illustration of them; and it may justly be regarded rather as an illustration of the doctrines of Moral Philosophy, and an appendix to the main body of the work, than as a treatise on Political Science."—LORD BROUGHAM: Polit. Philos., Part 1, 3d ed., 1853, 31.

"Both Butler and Paley have been largely indebted to Cumberland."—Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, iii. 404. See also 407, 417; ii. 580.

Paley acknowledges the obligations of this work to "Abraham Tucker, the heavy and desultory author of a book [The Light of Nature Pursued] the principle of which, whether true or false, by his own singular powers of style and illustration, Paley has wrought up into his masterly and invincible work on Moral and Political Philosophy."—Lon. Quar. Rev., ix. 387, July, 1813.

An eminent political writer of our own day coincides with many authorities when he styles Paley's but, unaccompanied with a proper qualification, this commendation is calculated to mislead the student. We have already expressed the opinion (see Preface to this Dictionary) that Paley's "theory of expediency is radically unsound;" and we now apply the same comment to his dicta on the Law of Honour, the occasional admissibility of falsehood, and other deviations from the standard of Scripture. Well-deserved censures of these grave offences will be found in Gisborne's Principles of Moral Philosophy Investigated, 1789; Edward Pearson's Remarks on the Theory of Morals, 1800; Edward Pearson's Annotations on the Practical Part of Dr. Paley's Principles of Moral and Political Philosophy, 1801; Sir James Mackintosh's Prelim. Exam., April, 1859.

"It cannot be denied that Paley was sometimes rather a lax moralist, especially on public duties. It is a sin which easily besets men of strong good sense, little enthusiasm, and much experience. They are naturally led to lower their precepts to the level of their expectations."—SIR J. MACKINTOSH: Works, Lon., 1854, i. 189.

"As Sir James Mackintosh justly remarks, all that Paley says in refutation of the principle of worldly honour is hollow and unmeaning. In fact, it is merely one of the commonplaces adopted by satire, and no philosophy at all."—De Quincey's Lit. Reminis., Bost., 1851, ii. 323, n.

"Perhaps the perfection of acuteness appears in Sir James Mackintosh's refutation of Paley upon the law of honour. Rarely has a false idea been more suddenly caused to founder and to show out. At one sling it is dispersed into smoke. . . . It is singular that Sir James, with all his scholastic subtlety, should not have remarked the confusion which Paley and others of his faction make between utility as a test or criterion of morality, and utility as a ground of morality. . . . Paley's talents, within lower spheres of speculation, were prodigious. But he wanted every thing that should have fitted him for what is subtlest in philosophy or what is grandest in ethics. Continue to honour the man as the most philosophic amongst the essentially worldly-minded; but do not ratify and countersign his hybrid morality by making it a chief text of your ethics, and an examination-book for the young aristocracy of England."—De Quincey's Essays on Philos. Writers, &c., Bost., 1854, i. 75, 77, 79.

"Paley's works, while they seem to put virtue in a commonsense form, and place her within reach of everybody, have degraded her from her antique pedestal, and, by lowering the standard, shaken the foundation on which she formerly stood, and, by making every man's own reason his guide, and bending morality, or allowing that morality can bend, to circumstances, he has done an injury to the tone of mind in the present generation that he was very far from intending."—Portfolio of a Man of the World: Lon. Gent. Mag., 1846, Pt. 1, 585.

"The best edition of Paley's Horæ Paulinæ is that of the Rev. T. R. Birks, who has added Notes and a (most valuable) Supplementary Treatise entitled 'Horæ Apostolicæ,' London, (Rel. Tract Soc.,) 1850, 12mo."—Rev. T. H. Horne, D.D., to S. Austin Allibone, Lon., Jan. 3, 1856.

"With so much originality in himself, it is remarkable that in the first conception of his works Paley was not strictly original; nor were even the materials laid in by himself. . . . [See the remarks of this reviewer on the Principles of Moral and Political Philosophy, ante, and the Evidences of Christianity and Natural Theology, post.] The hint of the Horæ Paulinæ, perhaps the most cogent and convincing specimen of moral argumentation in the world, was, we believe, first suggested by Doddridge."—*Lon. He has furnished a mass of most valuable evidence, which is peculiarly his own, and which no one else could have invented so well, or traced so clearly. . . . Had he produced no other work, his fame would have stood on no weak or narrow basis."—Lon. Quar. Rev., ii. 87, Aug. 1809.

"It would not be in the power of the most suspicious lawyer at the Old Bailey to subject two witnesses to a stricter cross-examination than that by which Paley has tried the testimony of St. Paul and St. Luke. . . . Here the two documents are pregnant with coincidences which no possible hypothesis but that of their veracity can account for. . . . We have the two parts of a cloven tally, nothing wanting but a comparison between both to prove the authenticity of both."—REV. J. J. BLUNT: Lon. Quar Rev., xxxviii. 316, 317, Oct. 1828.

"The 'Horæ Paulinæ' is remarkably adapted for the profitable exercise of the minds of law-students. It is pronounced by one of the highest authorities upon such matters, Dr. Whately, to be 'an incomparable specimen of reasoning,' [Rhetoric, p. 94, (note,) 5th ed.,]—and of that kind of reasoning, moreover, with which lawyers are peculiarly conversant, and in which they do and ought to excel. . . . Independently of the pre-eminent value and importance of such an undertaking, in a religious point of view, such an interesting and masterly exhibition of logical acuteness ought to be familiar to all capable of appreciating and profiting by it."—Warren's Law Studies, 2d ed., 1845, 224, 225.

"His observations are distinguished by profound learning and depth of thought."—DR. ADAM CLARKE.

"He is singularly ingenious in hitting on a casual argument where a common mind would have overlooked it. He makes his deduction just as far as that instance bears him out, and no farther; and, on proper occasions, he presses his reasonings with convincing force."—Orme's Bibl. Bib.

"He proceeds with infinite acuteness and ingenuity to produce most striking instances of undesigned coincidences in the documents in question. Many of his sentiments and expressions are eminently happy."—Green's Diary of a Lover of Lit., 1810, 41, 115.

"The most original and ingenious of his writings is the Horæ Paulinæ."—SIR J. MACKINTOSH: Works, 1854, i. 183.

"Paley's HORÆ PAULINÆ is perhaps the most original and ingenious of his productions which may be called strictly professional; but his Moral Philosophy and Natural Theology will probably make his name longer known to posterity."—Dibdin's Lib. Comp., 1825, 94, n.

3. A View of the Evidences of Christianity; in three Parts: Part I. Of the Direct Historical Evidence of Christianity, and wherein it is distinguished from the Evidence alleged for other Miracles; II. Of the Auxiliary Evidences of Christianity; and III. A Brief Consideration of some Popular Objections, 1794, 3 vols. 12mo; 2d ed., same year, 2 vols. 8vo; 17 edits. in 27 years. Among the last eds. are that of Rev. G. Fisk, with Questions and Analysis, 1836, 12mo; 1851, 12mo; of R. Potts, (in same vol. with Paley's Horæ Paulinæ,) with Notes, Analysis, and Questions, 1849, 8vo; of C. M. Mairne, with Notes and Additions, 1854, 12mo; of 1856, 8vo; of R. Whately, D.D., 1859, '61, 8vo, (N. York, 1860, '65, 12mo;) and the following:

"When you come to PALEY, WILLIAM, you may most safely say that the best edition of his 'Evidences' is that of the Rev. T. R. Birks, M.A., with Introduction, Notes, and Supplement, London, (Rel. Tract Soc.,) 1848, 12mo. Each of these editions [see Horæ Paulinæ, ante] sells for 3*s.* per copy. I marvel that some of your enterprising Theological Publishers have not reprinted them." —Rev. T. H. Horne, D.D., to the Author of this Dictionary, London, Jan. 3, 1856.

"Lardner's defence of Revelation really forms the groundwork of Dr. Paley's Evidences."—LORD BROUGHAM: Pref. to Lives of Philos. Time Geo. III., 1855, xiii., n.

"The Evidences of Christianity are formed out of an admirable translation of Butler's Analogy, and a most skilful abridgment of Lardner's Credibility of the Gospel History."—SIR J. MACKINTOSH: Works, 1854, i. 183.

"The Evidences of Christianity are professedly a compilation; but so condensed and compacted, so illuminated and enforced, that it is impossible not to admire the matchless powers of the compiler's genius in turning the patient drudgery of Lardner to such account."—Lon. Quar. Rev., ix. 397, July, 1813.

"I esteem the three little volumes of Dr. Paley, [Evidences,] containing the marrow of the more elaborate writings of the learned Dr. Lardner, together with his single volume of Horæ Paulinæ, far above whole bookcases-full of the voluminous undigested speculations of many well-meaning authors."—DEAN MILNER.

"As in the Natural Theology he discovered proofs of the benevolence of the Deity in much that had been considered objections to it, so in the Evidences does he found many arguments for the truth of Scripture precisely upon points which had been thought difficulties in the way. . . . We think it next to impossible for a candid unbeliever to read the Evidences of Paley, in their proper order, unshaken."—REV. J. J. BLUNT: Lon. Quar. Rev., xxxviii. 312, 317, Oct. 1828.

"Probably without exception the most clear and satisfactory statement of the historical proofs of the Christian religion in any age or country."—REV. ROBERT HALL. See Hall's Works, ed. 1853, i. 8.

"In this luminous and comprehensive work, the historical evidence for the truth of our Scriptures is arranged with clearness, and stated to the reader with the utmost force and precision."—REV. R. LYNAM.

Yet a critic in Blackwood's Magazine (August, 1825, 160) complains that Paley's Evidences, "excellent as it is, is much too long, . . . and the style as uninviting as it could be."

"We regard Dr. Paley's writings on the Evidences of Christianity," exclaims John Foster, "as of so signally decisive a character, that we could be content to let them stand as the essence and the close of the great argument on the part of its believers, and should feel no despondency or chagrin if we could be prophetically certified that such an efficient Christian reasoner would never henceforward arise. We should consider the grand fortress of proof as now raised and finished,—the intellectual capital of that empire which is destined to leave the widest boundaries attained by the Romans very far behind. It is impossible to hear with the slightest degree of respect or patience the expressions of doubt or anxiety about the truth of Christianity, from any one who can delay a week to obtain the celebrated View of its Evidences, or fail to read it through again and again. It is of no use to say what would be our opinion of the moral and intellectual state of his mind, if after this he remained still undecided."—Critical Essays, 1856, i. 236, 238. 4. Natural Theology; or, Evidences of the Existence and Attributes of the Deity, collected from the Appearances of Nature, 1802, 8vo. Ten edits. pub. within 7 years from date of 1st edit. Illustrated by a Series of Plates and Explanatory Notes, by James Paxton, of R. C. of Surgeons, to which is added Botanical Theology, by T. S. Duncan, with Additions; 2d ed., 1826, 2 vols. 8vo; again, 1838, 2 vols. 8vo.

"Mr. Paxton has executed his task in a manner so satisfactory as well deserves the thanks of the public."—Edin. Rev.

Illustrated by Forty Plates and Selections from the Notes of Dr. Paxton, with Additions, Notes, &c., edited by John Ware, M.D., Bost., 12mo. Paley's Natural Theology, edited by E. Bartlett, M.D., Bost., 1839, 2 vols. 12mo, with Essay by Bishop A. Potter, N. York, 1840, 2 vols. 18mo. The student can by no means dispense with the following volumes: I. A Discourse of Natural Theology, showing the Nature of the Evidences and the Advantages of the Study, by Henry Lord Brougham, 1835, 12mo; II. Paley's Natural Theology, with Illustrative Notes by Henry Lord Brougham, &c., and Sir Charles Bell, &c., 1836, 2 vols. 12mo; III. Dissertations on Subjects of Science connected with Natural Theology, being the concluding volumes of the New Edition of Paley's Works, by Henry Lord Brougham, 1839, 2 vols. 12mo. The 5 vols. repub., 1846, 4 vols. 18mo; 1851, 4 vols. 18mo. The 4 vols. are (both 1846 and 1851 edits.) sometimes bound in 2 vols. 18mo. Last eds., 1855 and 1857, each in 3 vols. 18mo, viz.: I. Lord Brougham's Introductory Discourse, and Archdeacon Paley's Natural Theology; II. Archdeacon Paley's Natural Theology; Sir Charles Bell's Illustrations; and Lord Brougham's Dissertation on the Origin of Evil, &c.; III. (Supplementary volume) Lord Brougham's Dialogues on Instinct and Dissertations on Fossil Osteology; and Sir Charles Bell's Treatise on Animal Mechanics. Lord Brougham's Preliminary Discourse (ed. 1835) was reviewed unfavourably in London Quarterly Review for Feb. 1836, 387–416; and his lordship's Discourse (ed. 1835) and Sir Charles Bell's Notes and Appendix (ed. 1836) were reviewed favourably in the Edinburgh Review for Jan. 1837, 263–302. Lord Brougham's Discourse was highly commended in the Eclectic Review, the Athenæum, and the Literary Gazette. The 5 vols., 1835–39, are favourably noticed in the North American Review for Jan. 1842, 102–141. See, also, reviews of Paley's Theology in Edin. Rev., i. 287, (by Lord Jeffrey;) Christian Examiner, vi. 389, (by S. C. Sewall;) xxx. 273; New England Mag., iv. 454. And refer to Diary of a Lover of Lit., in Lon. Gent. Mag., 1835, ii. 236; NEWTON, SIR ISAAC, p. 1418, col. ii., ante,—quotation from Sir David Brewster.

Lord Brougham has certainly been amply rewarded for his labours in this important department of science.

"It has given me," he remarks, "a most heartfelt satisfaction to receive many communications from persons both at home and abroad, which intimated their having been converted from irreligious opinions by the 'Commentaries and Illustrations of Paley,' published in 1835 and 1838 [1839]."—Pref. to Lives of the Philos. Time George III., 1855, xiii.

His lordship's collaborator, Sir Charles Bell, has been thus highly complimented by an eminent authority:

"Paley's Natural Theology is the wonderful work of a man who, after sixty, had studied Anatomy in order to write it; and it could only have been surpassed by one who, to great originality of conception and clearness of exposition, adds the advantage of a high place in the first class of physiologists." [Note: See Animal Mechanics, by Mr. Charles Bell, published by the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge.]—SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH: Works, 1854, i. 184.

We add a few more notices of Paley's Natural Theology:

"As a collection of striking facts and powerful arguments for the existence of a wise and beneficent Creator, this publication is entitled to a very favourable reception. . . . Dr. Paley's chief excellence consists in the judicious disposition of his forces, and the skill and confidence with which he has extended his array to every point which atheism had affected to menace. . . . The language of this book is by no means remarkable for dignity or elegance. Perspicuity and conciseness seem to have been the only accomplishments of style which the author was ambitious of acquiring; and to these his praise must be confined. There is a great carelessness of composition throughout the whole volume, and a colloquial homeliness of diction, upon some occasions, that does not seem altogether suitable either to the gravity of the subject or the dignity of the writer."—LORD JEFFREY: Edin. Rev., i. 287–305, Jan. 1803.

"His Natural Theology will open the heart, that it may understand, or at least receive, the Scriptures, if any thing can. It is philosophy in its highest and noblest sense; scientific, without the jargon of science; profound, but so clear that its depth is disguised."—REV. J. J. BLUNT: Lon. Quar. Rev., xxxviii. 312, Oct. 1828.

"An unequalled performance."—P. M. ROGET, M.D.

"Many beautiful illustrations of the wisdom and goodness of God in the works of creation."—Bickersteth's C. S., ed. 1844, 382.

"His Natural Theology is the best work on the sublimest subject of human contemplation—the wisdom of God in the works of nature—that exists in our language."—SIR ARCHIBALD ALISON: Hist. of Europe 1815–1852, chap. v.

A critic whom we have several times had occasion to quote in the course of this article, (see Nos. 1, 2, and 3, ante,) referring to the want of originality in Paley's Moral and Political Philosophy, Horæ Paulinæ, and Evidences of Christianity, continues:

"The same character belongs to his last and perhaps his most elaborate work, the Natural Theology. Here, too, Paley had his pioneers, as well as his forerunners; but his inimitable skill in arranging and condensing his matter, his peculiar turn for what may be termed 'animal mechanics,' the aptness and the wit of his illustrations, and occasionally the warmth and the solemnity of his devotion, which, by a happy and becoming process, became more animated as he drew nearer to the close of life, stamp on this work a character more valuable than originality itself."—Lon. Quar. Rev., ix. 397, July, 1813.

Among the books which Paley laid under tribute in the preparation of his Natural Theology, Sir Matthew Hale's Primitive Origination of Mankind, 1677, fol., has been cited; but, we need hardly remark, no one could connect the idea of "originality" with Paley's leading principle.

"The reasoning by which Socrates, in Xenophon's hearing, confuted the little atheist Aristodemus, is exactly the reasoning of Paley's Natural Theology. Socrates makes precisely the same use of the statues of Polycletus and the pictures of Zeuxis which Paley makes of the watch."—Lord Macaulay's Crit. and Histor. Essays, 1854, ii. 541; from Edin. Rev., Oct. 1840.

But it was not so generally known that even the "use of the watch," a portion of the language used in the illustration, and other parts of the Natural Theology, were borrowed without acknowledgment from Chamberlayne's translation of Bernard Nieuwentyt's Christian Philosopher, (so styled by the translator,) pub. in London, 1718–19, 3 vols. 8vo. This fact was pointed out by "Verax," in the London Athenæum, Aug. 12, 1848, 803. To this article, and to the apologies for Paley (who acknowledges general obligations in his preface) in the same periodical for Sept. 9 and 16 ensuing, we refer the curious reader. It is but fair to add that the editor of the Athenæum, and a writer in the Church and State Gazette, decide the case against Paley. See, also, Notices of Paley's Natural Theology, in Albert Barnes's Essays and Reviews, 1855, i. 10, 11; R. Blakey's Old Faces in New Masks, 1859, sm. 8vo; N. Amer. Rev., Jan. 1865, 179, 181, (by C. Wright.)

We have now noticed—as proposed—the four works by which Paley's name is best known. He also published several theological tracts, a number of separate sermons, and the following work, which appeared without his name: 5. The Clergyman's Companion in visiting the Sick, 1795; many edits. New and corrected edit., 1839, 12mo. See Dodwell, Wm. This work is extracted chiefly from the works of Jeremy Taylor, Bishop Patrick, Kettlewell, and others. Paley's prefatory part has been highly commended. In the edit. of 1839 "the antiquated style is corrected and improved throughout, and prayers, one by Dr. Stonehouse and four by Mr. Meyrick, are added to the old collection." An ed. of this work, with an Appendix by the Rev. John Bull, was pub. in 1812, 8vo. The last ed. of The Clergyman's Companion was pub. 1844, 18mo.

A collective ed. of Paley's Sermons and Tracts was pub. in 1808, 8vo, and they both have been several times reprinted. In 1825 appeared (then first published) Sermons on Various Subjects, edited by the Rev. Edmund Paley, M.A., [son of the author,] Vicar of Easingwold, 2 vols. 8vo, Bost., 1827, 8vo. The character of Paley's sermons is too well known to render it necessary to expatiate upon their characteristics.

"In the volume before us," remarks the reviewer of the edition of 1808, "we have a collection rather of useful disquisitions on religious subjects, than of impressive sacred orations. We see before us rather a clear-headed moralist, coolly investigating truth, analyzing and dissecting with skill the subject which he takes in hand, reasoning upon it with an accuracy which all must feel, and stating his results in a method which all must understand, than a powerful master of eloquence, endeavouring to work upon the conviction of his hearers, by addressing as well their passions as their understandings, calling to the aid of argument great conceptions, striking imagery, and animated description."—Lon. Quar. Rev., ii. 77, Aug. 1809.

Dr. Dibdin considers that, in the review from which we have just quoted,

"The estimation of Paley's talents seems to be a little unworthy of that great man's name."—Lib. Comp., 1825, 94.

An acute critic, from whom we often extract a few lines on prominent authors, in characterizing Blair's sermons, remarks that "They do not come under the reproach which has been made against Paley's, of being mere moral essays; and they are very superior to his, from not being written with an affectation of homespun which was unworthy of Paley's abilities."—Portfolio of a Man of the World: Lon. Gent. Mag., 1844, Pt. 2, 566.

"No reader of Dr. Paley's former works will open his Sermons with any expectation of what we usually call eloquence. . . . We were prepared to expect a number of elaborate, and therefore important, dissertations. We were not apprised that the volume would chiefly consist of the very short and hastily-written discourses which were composed in the ordinary course of his professional services. The shortness, indeed, of some of them is tantalizing and vexatious. . . . It would be ridiculous in us to affect to recommend a volume written by Dr. Paley. It will be extensively read; its readers will receive many useful and striking thoughts; and we earnestly wish they may study the New Testament enough to be saved from any injurious impression of what we cannot allow ourselves to regard as unimportant errors."—John Foster: Crit. Essays, 1856, i. 239, 241, 251; Review of vol. of 1809. See, also, Works of Wm. E. Channing; N. Amer. Rev., xli. 396, (by A. H. Everett.)

Mr. Bickersteth, an advocate of what is denominated "the Evangelical party of the Church of England,"—we have nothing to do here with the correctness of the term,—numbers Paley among those "who did not hold evangelical principles at first, but embraced them afterward;" and considers that he proves this statement by comparing portions of Paley's earlier and later sermons. See Bickersteth's Christian Student, ed. 1844, 321, 322.

It is often alleged that Paley's supposed defects in orthodoxy prevented his being raised to the episcopal bench; but those who remember the reference of George III. to "Pigeon Paley" (one of the few bon-mots of a very matter-of-fact man) will be inclined to think that the political philosopher was at least in as little favour in high places as the Christian divine. The complaints of Paley's lack of preferment are perhaps exaggerated: he never indeed reached the mitre; but a comfortable parsonage, a well-stocked library, a happy fireside, and £1200 per annum, were not calculated to drive a philosopher to despair or a divine to suicide. When we consider, too, that the prime minister tried, though without success, to make Paley a bishop, whilst Paley succeeded in making the prime minister a butt, we are disposed to check our lamentations over the disgraceful obscurity of the clerical wit. Sir Archibald Alison's remarks on this subject, however, (Hist. of Europe 1815–1852, chap. v.,) deserve the attention of the reader.

"All the theological works of all the numerous bishops whom he [Pitt] made and translated are not, when put together, worth fifty pages of the Horæ Paulinæ, or of the Natural Theology, or of the View of the Evidences of Christianity. But on Paley this all-powerful minister never bestowed the smallest benefice."—Lord Macaulay: Life of Pitt, in Encyc. Brit., 8th ed., xvii. 1859.

Comments on Paley's theological opinions will be found in the Lon. Quar. Rev., ii. 82–83, and (by Rev. J. J. Blunt) xxxviii. 326–329. He was twice married, first in 1776, and had by his first wife four sons and four daughters. His second wife survived him. His presentation to the valuable living of Bishop Wearmouth was principally ascribed to his excellent answer sent to the Parliamentary Committee against the claims of the slave-dealers, when the subject of the abolition of the slave-trade was about being discussed in the House of Lords.

The principal collective edits. of Paley's Works are: I. With Life, by Alexander Chalmers, Lon., 1819, 5 vols. 8vo; 1821, 5 vols. 8vo. II. With Extracts from his Correspondence, and Life, by Rev. Robert Lynam, 1823, 5 vols. 8vo, £2 12*s.* 6*d.*; 1825, 5 vols. 8vo; 1825, 8vo. III. With additional Serms., &c., and a corrected account of the Life and Writings of the Author, by his son, Rev. With Life, Phila., 8vo, 1st ed., 1831; last ed., 1858; 20,000 printed in all. The preceding edits. (I.–VI.) are complete,—profess to contain the whole of Paley's Works. We also notice—VII. Works; i.e. Evidences of Christianity, Moral and Political Philosophy, Natural Theology, Horæ Paulinæ, The Clergyman's Companion, &c., 1842, imp. 8vo; 1846, 8vo; 1851, 8vo; 1856, imp. 8vo; Theological Works, 1860, sup. r. 8vo. A vol. entitled Beauties selected from the Writings of the late William Paley, D.D., alphabetically arranged, with an Account of his Life and Critical Remarks upon some of his Opinions, by Wm. Hamilton Reid, was pub. Lon., 1810, 24mo.

In addition to the authorities already quoted and referred to, see Memoirs of William Paley, D.D., by George Wilson Meadley, Sunderl., 1809, 8vo; reviewed in Lon. Quar. Mag., July, 1858, (Religion and Society,—Paley and Channing; from the National Review;) Brown, Thomas; Whately, Richard, D.D., No. 80. One of the many over-zealous eulogists of our author goes so far as to say that

"Paley's writings have done more for the moral improvement of mankind than perhaps the writings of any other man that ever existed. The doctrines laid down and established by this wise and able writer may be considered as the principia of moral philosophy."—The Right Hon. W. Windham, in a Speech, Feb. 9, 1810.

But, in opposition to such extravagance as this, we have already recorded the dissent of wiser men,—wiser, at least, in the discussion of this question. We append some more temperate verdicts on the merits of Paley:

"The name of Dr. Paley, though scarcely to be reckoned among those of the great theologians and philosophers of England, is probably associated with as large and as enviable a portion of public approbation as that of any living ecclesiastic. With less learning and less originality than some of his distinguished predecessors, it would be difficult, perhaps, to point out his superior in soundness of judgment, or in vigilant and comprehensive sagacity. . . . Almost all the writings of Dr. Paley relate to the highest and most important questions upon which human reason can be exercised, and appear to have been composed with suitable caution and deliberation. They are elaborate, rather than ingenious; and seem to have been diligently meditated and carefully arranged, rather than to have been conceived in any fervour of imagination, or poured forth in any conviction of their infallibility. The utmost pains are taken, therefore, to render everything intelligible and precise; and more anxiety is shown that nothing necessary shall be omitted, than that all superfluity should be excluded. All cavil is prevented by a jealous strictness of expression; and a few homely illustrations are commonly sufficient to expose those illusions by which a false philosophy is supported in so many of her unsubstantial speculations."—Lord Jeffrey: Edin. Rev., i. 287, 288, Jan. 1803.

"It might be difficult to mention an author who has more recommended to the public taste useful knowledge and solid sense, by conveying them under a pleasing form, than Dr. Paley. . . . He did not possess a comprehensive and grasping genius, nor was he endowed with a rich and sparkling imagination. His mind was well informed, but not furnished with deep, extensive, ponderous erudition. . . . His distinguishing characteristic is a penetrating understanding, and a clear, logical head: what he himself comprehends fully, that he details luminously. He never builds a conclusion on unsound or insufficient premises."—Lon. Quar. Rev., ii. 75, 86, Aug. 1809.

"His mind was of a very original cast, and of that universal comprehension which is able to adapt itself to every subject. . . . With so much originality in himself, it is remarkable that in the first conception of his works Paley was not strictly original; nor were even the materials laid in by himself, [see Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4, ante.] As a philosopher and a friend (we mean not to exalt his character by the comparison) he had many points of resemblance to Socrates."—Lon. Quar. Rev., ix. 396, 397, 399.

"The writings of Butler and Paley form (and most deservedly) the great text-books for religious reasoning throughout the schools and colleges of England."—Edin. Rev., i. 305, Jan. 1830. See Sir William Hamilton's Discussions, &c., N. York, 1855, 479.

"The child that is unborn will thank that man for his labours."—Rev. Sydney Smith.

"A man singularly without guile, and yet often misunderstood or misrepresented; a man who was thought to have no learning, because he had no pedantry, and who was too little of a quack to be reckoned a philosopher; who would have been infallibly praised as a useful writer on the theory of government if he had been more visionary, and would have been esteemed a deeper divine if he had not been always so intelligible."—Rev. J. J. Blunt: Lon. Quar. Rev., xxxviii. 335, Oct. 1828.

"Johnson and Paley, Locke and Butler, immediately occur as the great masters of moral, metaphysical, and religious instruction.—Locke the votary of truth, and Paley the very genius of good sense. . . . Nothing can drop from the pen of such a writer, so remarkable for his clearness and excellent sense, that can be without its importance, particularly where the subject has any immediate connection with the business of human life."—Smyth's Lects. on Mod. Hist., Lects. XXIV. and XXIX.

"This excellent writer, who, after Clarke and Butler, ought to be ranked among the brightest ornaments of the English Church in the eighteenth century, is, in the history of philosophy, naturally placed after Tucker, to whom, with praiseworthy liberality, he owns his extensive obligations. It is a mistake to suppose that he owed his system to Hume,—a thinker too refined, and a writer perhaps too elegant, to have naturally attracted him. . . . The natural frame of Paley's understanding fitted it more for business and the world than for philosophy; and he accordingly enjoyed with considerable relish the few opportunities which the latter part of his life afforded of taking a part in the affairs of his county as a magistrate. . . . His style is as near perfection in its kind as any in our language. Perhaps no words were ever more expressive and illustrative than those in which he represents the art of life to be that of rightly 'setting our habits.'"—Sir J. Mackintosh: Works, 1851, i. 183.

"Paley, who had not read a great deal, had certainly read Puffendorff. He has borrowed from him [in his Principles of Moral and Political Philosophy] several minor illustrations. . . . Their minds were in some respects alike, both phlegmatic, honest, and sincere, without warmth or fancy; yet there seems a more thorough good nature and kindliness of heart in our countryman. . . . They do not, indeed, resemble each other in their modes of writing: one was very laborious, the other very indolent; one sometimes misses his mark by circuity, the other by precipitance."—Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, iii. 417.

In America Paley's works have had a large circulation.

Sir James Mackintosh records in his journal, under date of March 31, 1812:

"In the American papers I see advertised the sixth American edition of 'Paley's Philosophy.' No bad sign of American intellect."—Mackintosh's Life, vol. ii. chap. iii.

It would be a difficult matter to reckon up the "American editions of Paley's Philosophy" issued since the date of this entry,—between 1812 and 1870. It is well, however, to quote the cordial tribute to his master of one of Paley's most eminent American scholars:

"There is no name in the English Church, perhaps, that should stand higher than his; there are few in the vast circles of English literature whose just fame shall be more extensively or permanently recorded."—Rev. Albert Barnes: Essays and Reviews, 1855, ii. 217; from An Address delivered before the Society of Inquiry in Amherst College, August 21, 1838.

We have seen on a preceding page that of the Philadelphia ed. of Paley's complete works 20,000 copies were printed between 1831 and 1858.

We conclude with a few lines from the last commentator on Paley:

"His mind was essentially English, and English in its best mood. He was not remarkable for his learning, though far from being ill informed; but the bent of his mind was not toward scholarship. He was eminently practical in his ideas; his thoughts, descending from the clouds, ever turned to some object of actual importance in real life. His mind was not of the most elevated cast; and accordingly he made utility the great object of life and measure of actions. He will never be a favourite, accordingly, with that handful of men who nevertheless alone do great things in the world, who aim at the noble and generous in all things, and let the useful take care of itself. But, while his disposition precluded him from rising to the highest rank in literature, which never is to be attained but by the influence of lofty feelings, within his limits, and in a lower sphere, he was very admirable and eminently useful."—Sir Archibald Alison: Hist. of Europe 1815–1852, vol. i. chap. v., 1852.

Palfray, Warwick. Evangelical Psalmodist, Salem, 1802.

Palfrey, John Gorham, D.D., LL.D., son of John Palfrey, and grandson of William Palfrey, Paymaster-General in the army of the Revolution, was born at Boston, May 2, 1796; graduated at Harvard College in 1815; was ordained to the pastoral care of the Brattle Square Church (Boston) in 1818, and retained this charge until 1831, when he was elected Dexter Professor of Sacred Literature in Harvard University. In 1839 he resigned his professorship, and has since devoted his time and talents to the duties connected with periodical literature, theological treatises, political services, and historical investigations. From January, 1836, to January, 1843, he edited the North American Review, to which between 1817 and 1859 he contributed thirty-one articles; was elected to the General Court of Massachusetts in 1842 and 1843; Secretary of the Commonwealth, 1844–47; a member of the National House of Representatives from Boston, 1847–49; Postmaster of Boston, 1861–66. Mr. Palfrey is a warm advocate of the opinions of the "Free-Soil party" in Massachusetts. For details respecting his life, we refer the reader to his autobiographical letter to a friend,—a portion of which will be found in Loring's Hundred Boston Orators, 1854, 486–491. 1. "Upon the whole, we consider this as, beyond all competition, the most luminous work that has ever been produced on the early institutions of England; and, though Mr. Turner's valuable history must always be a standard book of reference, it is to Mr. Palgrave that recourse will be had by the curious antiquary, the inquirer into the origin of English jurisprudence, and by him who loves to trace, in the calm mirror of history, the restless waves of human action."—*Edin. Palmer, Elihu, 1763–1806, a native of Connecticut, graduated at Dartmouth College, 1787, was for a short time a Congregational minister, but subsequently became a deistical preacher and a violent radical political agitator. He resided principally in the city of New York, but died at Philadelphia. 1. Principles of Nature; or, A Development of the Moral Causes of Happiness and Misery among the Human Species, Lon., 1802, 8vo. This deistical work was reprinted by R. Carlile, in 1819, 8vo. See Lowndes's Brit. Lib., 1207. 2. Prospect or View of the Moral World from the Year 1804, N. York, 1804, 2 vols. 8vo. An account of Palmer will be found in Dr. J. W. "Palmer's Reports, according to Chancellor Kent, are of respectable authority; though a somewhat different idea, as to this last point, seems to be conveyed by C. J. Parker, or, at all events, as to the earlier cases in the volume."—Wallace's Reporters, 3d ed., 1855, 185, q. v.

Palmer, Mrs. Henrietta Lee, formerly Miss Lee, b. in Baltimore, Feb. 6, 1834, was married to John William Palmer, M.D., (post,) in 1855. Mrs. Palmer has for some time been a contributor to the New York Tribune; translated, for Rachel, The Lady Tartuffe; and recently gave to the world a volume entitled The Stratford Gallery; or, The Shakspeare Sisterhood: com. Forty-five Ideal Portraits described by Henrietta Lee Palmer. Illustrated with five engravings on steel, from designs by eminent hands, New York, 1858, r. 8vo, pp. 302. A critic remarks of this volume, which has elicited many warm commendations,

"Mrs. Palmer's plan is simply to present a woman's instinctive measurement of the height and breadth and depth of Shakespeare's women. She has done this in a style which will win her an admiring and almost always assenting perusal from a wide circle of fellow-devotees."

"The artistic merits of the work, and the inevitable popularity of the subject," remarks an eminent authority, "would alone make it successful as a gift publication; but the naïve feeling and talent of the author add new zest to the Gallery, where we all so fondly linger."—H. T. TUCKERMAN.

Palmer, Herbert, D.D., 1601–1647, a native of Wingham, Kent; preacher at St. Alphage's Church, Canterbury, 1626; Vicar of Ashwell, Herts, 1632; one of the Assembly of Divines, 1643; Master of Queen's College, Cambridge, 1644. He pub. several occasional sermons; aided Daniel Cawdrey in the Sabbatum Redivivum, Pt. 1, 1645, 4to; 2, 1652, 4to; and was the author of Memorials of Godliness and Christianity, 1644, 12mo; 13th ed., 1708, 12mo. New ed., Lord Bacon not the Author of The Christian Paradoxes, being a reprint of Memorials of Godliness and Christianity, by Herbert Palmer, B.A., with Introduction, Memoir, and Notes, by the Rev. Alex. B. Grosart, 1865.

"Two hundred and sixteen years has the erroneous authorship existed, [see editions of Bacon's works,] but is at last knocked on the head."—Lon. Reader, 1865, i. 69, q. v.

Palmer, John William, M.D., b. in Baltimore, April 4th, 1825, City Physician of San Francisco in 1849, being in China in 1851, volunteered in the E. I. Company's service, and served as surgeon of an active war-steamer through the Burmese campaigns of 1852–53. He returned to the U. States in June, 1853, and has since that date been a contributor to Putnam's and Harper's Magazine, the Atlantic Monthly, the Criterion, the New York Tribune, the New World, and the National Intelligencer. Among his best-known fugitive pieces are the California Sketches in Putnam's Magazine; Forty-Nine, being certain Chapters from the Real Romance of San Francisco, in Harper's Magazine; and Sketches of East India Life, in the 1st vol. of the Atlantic Monthly. In 1856 he pub. The Golden Dagon; or, Up and Down the Irrawaddi; being Passages of Adventure in the Burman Empire, by an American; New York, 12mo. This work was very favourably received at home, and eulogized and printed abroad. A notice of some length, with copious extracts, will be found in the Lon. Athenæum, 1856, 112–114. See, also, Lon. Examiner and Lon. Literary Gazette. New ed., illustrated, 1859. In June, 1858, a comedy, in three Acts, by Dr. Palmer, entitled The Queen's Heart, was produced at the Howard Athenæum in Boston, and met with complete success. It has since been eulogized in the papers of the day by several eminent American critics. Dr. Palmer contributed a number of Oriental articles to Appleton's New American Cyclopædia. In 1859 he pub. (see Lon. Athen., July 9, 1859) The New and the Old; or, California and India in Romantic Aspects, 12mo; Dedicated to O. W. Holmes, M.D.; and in the same year gave to the world a trans. of Michelet's L'Amour, from the 4th Paris ed., N. York, 12mo. He pub. in 1860 (new ed., Dec. 1864) Folk-Songs, a Book of Poems made for the Popular Heart, with upwards of 60 Illustrations, N. York, r. 8vo. He has since made other translations from Michelet and Legouvé, (The Moral History of Women, 1860, 12mo.) In Dec. 1867 he published at Boston the first of five volumes 16mo, viz.: I. The Poetry of Compliment and Courtship; II. The Poetry of Marriage and Offspring; III. The Poetry of Home and Friends; IV. The Poetry of Meeting, Parting, and Separation; V. The Poetry of Bereavement, Condolement, and Consolation.

Palmerston, Henry Temple, LL.D., Third Viscount of Palmerston county, Dublin, and Baron Temple, of Mount Temple county, Sligo, Ireland, b. Oct. 20, 1784, in Park Street, Westminster, commenced his education at Harrow, continued it at the University of Edinburgh, and completed it at the University of Cambridge. He was a member of the House of Commons from 1806, and held office under ten prime ministers, viz.: the Duke of Portland, Mr. Perceval, the Earl of Liverpool, Mr. Canning, Lord Goderich, the Duke of Wellington, Earl Grey, Lord Melbourne, (first and second ministries,) Lord John Russell, and the Duke of Aberdeen. He was for nineteen years (1809–1828) Secretary of War; for fifteen years (1830–1834, 1835–1841, 1846–1851) Secretary for Foreign Affairs; Secretary for the Home Department, 1852–1855; First Lord of the Treasury and Premier of England, 1855–58, and from 1859 until his death, Oct. 18, 1865. His lordship had little claims to authorship, (he was, indeed, in his youth a contributor of Satires to the New Whig Guide, Anti-Jacobin, and John Bull;) but the book entitled Opinions and Policy of the Right Hon. Viscount Palmerston as Minister, Diplomatist, and Statesman, during more than Forty Years of Public Life, with a Memorial by G. H. Francis, 1852, 8vo, contains many extracts from his speeches, &c. Dr. Paris was an intelligent and zealous naturalist, and founded the Royal Geological Society of Cornwall, one of the earliest associations of the kind. He also wrote an excellent paper On the Soils of Cornwall, in which he anticipates the modern use of mineral manure. See a notice of Dr. Paris in Lon. Athen., 1856, 1609.

Paris, Matthew, a monk who assumed the religious habit in the Benedictine monastery of St. Alban's in 1217, and died there in 1259, is known by his history of England, entitled Historia Major, which commences with the Norman Conquest and comes down to the date of his death. It was continued by William Rishanger, a monk of the same abbey. Paris's history to the year 1235 may be called a version of the Flores Historiarum of Roger of Wendover; and yet some modern authorities have contended that Paris was really the author of the latter work. But see, in opposition to this view, the comments of the Rev. H. O. Coxe, who edited the edit. of Wendover pub. by the Eng. Hist. Soc., 1841–44, 5 vols. 8vo. Even the Flores Historiarum of Matthew of Westminster has been, but erroneously, attributed to Matthew Paris. The edits. of the Historia Major are—I. Edited by Abp. Parker, Lon., fol. II. Tiguri, [Zurich,] 1589, fol. III. Tiguri, 1606, fol. II. and III. are reprints of I. IV., edited by Dr. Wm. Wats, q. v., 1640, fol.; 1641, fol.; title as follows:

Matthæi Paris Monachi Albanenses, Angli, Historia Major, cum Rogeri Wendoveri, Willielmi Rishangeri, authorisque Majori Minorique Historiis collata, cui accesserunt Vitæ Offarum et xxiii. Abbatum S. Albani, etc., cum Variis Lectionibus Glossario et Indicibus, edente W. Wats.

This is the edit. generally preferred.

V. Paris, 1644, fol. VI. Lon., 1684, fol. This edit. is preferred by Dr. Dibdin (Lib. Comp., 168) to that of 1640, 1641. V. and VI. contain the minor productions added by Dr. Wats. See, also, VII. Grande Chronique de Matthieu Paris, traduite en Français par A. Huillard-Breholles, accompagnée de Notes, et précédée d'une Introduction par M. le Duc de Luynes, Paris, 1840–41, 9 vols. 8vo. VIII. Matthew Paris's Chronicle, trans. by Dr. J. A. Giles, 1852–53, 3 vols. fp. 8vo, being vols. xvii., xix., and xxxi. of Bohn's Antiquarian Library. Vols. ix. and xi., 1849, of this Library, consist of Dr. J. A. Giles's trans. of Roger of Wendover's Flowers of History. Among Paris's unpublished works (a number are ascribed to him by Bale and Pits) there are MSS. of an epitome of his history, referred to sometimes as Historia Minor. Bishop Nicolson says that this compendium contains "several particulars of note omitted in the larger history."

"To the series of Chronicles and Memorials published in England, under the direction of the Master of the Rolls, have just been added two volumes of what Archbishop Parker called the 'Historia Minor of Matthew Paris,' which was called by himself 'Historia Anglorum.' The work is edited by Sir Frederick Madden, and now, for the first time, printed from a very complete copy of it, which is in the handwriting of the author, and is among the MSS. of the Old Royal Collection in the British Museum. Attention was first called to this text in 1836, by the Rev. Joseph Stevenson, in the notes to his edition of Sir Robert Cray's 'Scalacronica.' Mr. Stevenson then said of it that it varied so much from the Greater Chronicle printed by Wats, as to assume the appearance of a distinct version, and a version, too, which, in many points, is fuller, stronger, and better than that already given to the public."—Aug. 1866.

Matthew Paris was esteemed by Henry III., and also by the Pope, who sent him on a mission of reformation to Norway, and was noted as a universal scholar. See Bale; Pits; Nicolson's Hist. Lib.; Blackw. Mag., v. 257, 258, 259, 262; vi. 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 273, 274; vii. 141, 142, 143, 144, 145, 605, 608, 609.

"For sincerity of narration, truth of colouring, and extent of information, the Historia Major of the Monk of St. Albans may be justly deemed as valuable a work as this or any other age has produced."—Berington's Middle Ages.

"The history of Matthew Paris, continued by Rishanger, details all these occurrences with the minuteness of an annalist, but with the spirit and feeling of an independent man. . . . I think I have never read a more honest historian."—SHARON TURNER.

"Matthew Paris, however in some respects not an absolutely trustworthy authority for events which happened out of England, is the best unquestionably for the rumours and impressions prevalent in Christendom,—rumours which, as rumours, and showing the state of the public mind, are not to be disdained by history."—REV. Park, Sir James Allan, D.C.L., one of the Justices of the Court of Common Pleas, b. in Scotland, 1763, was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn, 1784; made King's Counsel, 1799; promoted to the Bench, Jan. 1816; and knighted in May of the same year; d. 1838. 1. It will be observed that this work was first pub. earlier than Marshall's, and in the same year with Millar's: see MARSHALL, SAMUEL; MILLAR, JOHN, No. 2; DUER, JOHN, No. 2; PHILLIPS, WILLARD.

"Mr. Park is entitled to the superior [as compared with Marshall] and lasting merit of being the artist who first reduced the English law of insurance to the beauty and order of a regular science, and attracted to it the rays of foreign genius and learning. . . . He had the advantage of the labours of the whole period of Lord Mansfield's judicial life; and the decisions are collected and digested with great copiousness, erudition, and accuracy. He extracted all that was valuable from the compilations of Malynes, Molloy, Magens, Beawes, and Weskett; and he had the good sense and liberality to enrich his work with the materials of those vast and venerable repositories of commercial learning, the Le Guidon, the foreign ordinances, and the writings of Roccus, Bynkershoeck, Valin, Pothier, and Emerigon."—3 Kent, 430; 8th ed., 1854.

"Mr. Park deserves much praise for the judgment, accuracy, and general excellence of his system of the law of insurance. . . . As a collection of authentic cases in the fullest and most accurate form, it still remains unrivalled. . . . The learned author occasionally discusses general principles with a good deal of ability."—JUDGE STORY: review of Phillips on Insurance, N. Amer. Rev., Jan. 1825, 72, 74; and in Story's Miscell. Park, Mungo, 1771–1805, first opened his eyes on the world on his father's farm of Fowlshiels, on the banks of the Yarrow, near Selkirkshire. After three years' apprenticeship to Mr. Thomas Anderson, surgeon, of Selkirk, whose daughter Park subsequently married, and three sessions' attendance on the surgical courses of the University of Edinburgh, Park repaired to London, and, through the influence of Sir Joseph Banks, obtained the appointment of assistant surgeon to the "Worcester," East Indiaman. In that vessel he made a voyage to Sumatra in 1792, returning to England in the following year. In Trans. Linn. Soc., iii. 33, 1794, will be found a paper entitled Descriptions of Eight New Fishes from Sumatra, contributed by our young naturalist. On the 22d of May, 1795, he sailed from England, under the auspices of the African Association, as the successor to Major Houghton, who had died abroad whilst engaged in the exploration of the course of the Niger. After experiencing great hardships in his energetic efforts to fulfil the purpose of his mission, he returned to England on the 25th of December, 1797, and was enthusiastically received by men of science and the public at large. The two following years were devoted to a preparation of his narrative,—Travels in the Internal Districts of Africa, &c., with an Appendix, &c., by Major Rennell,—which appeared in 1799, Lon., 4to; also 1800–01, 2 vols. 8vo. This work met with a ready sale, and paid the author handsomely. See RENNELL, MAJOR JAMES, Nos. 4, 10. In 1799 he returned to Selkirk, and married the daughter of his old master, Mr. Anderson; settled as a surgeon at Peebles in 1801; sailed from Portsmouth, Jan. 30, 1805, as commander of a Government expedition of discovery into the interior of Africa; lost by sickness in about six months 39 out of the 43 Europeans who accompanied him from the Gambia; and was himself drowned in the Niger, probably in December, 1805, whilst attempting to escape from a party of native assailants. In 1815, 4to, was pub. (by Mr. John Whishaw, of Lincoln's Inn) The Journal of a Mission to the Interior of Africa, in the Year 1805, by Mungo Park; together with other Documents, Official and Private, relating to the same. To which is prefixed an Account of his Life. This, of course, must accompany the volume before noticed. Both were repub., 1816, 2 vols. 4to; 1823, 2 vols. 4to. Parker, Matthew, August 6, 1504–May 17, 1575, the second Protestant Archbishop of Canterbury, a native of Norwich, was educated at, and became Fellow of, Corpus Christi or Bene't College, Cambridge; ordained Deacon in April and Priest in June, 1527; preferred to the deanery of Stoke Clare, Suffolk, 1535; Master of Bene't College, 1544; married to Margaret Harlstone, 1547; Dean of Lincoln, 1552; deprived of his preferments on the accession of Queen Mary, 1553; Archbishop of Canterbury, 1559. He was zealously devoted to the stability of the throne, the promotion of letters, and the furtherance of the Protestant religion, and led an anxious life amidst the war of opinions, political and religious, which agitated his times. Bitterly opposed by the adherents of the Church of Rome, too conservative to please those who desired to unite Geneva and Canterbury, soundly rated by Elizabeth for having dared to take a wife, whom all the arguments for priestly celibacy failed to induce him to forsake, the good archbishop found little happiness in his exalted station. It will be remembered that it was in reference to the solemn act by which he was set apart to this high office that the absurd story of the Nag's Head Consecration was fabricated. It is unfair to call this a Roman Catholic fiction,—though invented by members of that communion; for a number of Roman Catholic writers profess their disbelief of it. Archbishop Parker edited, among other works, the histories of Matthew of Westminster, Matthew of Paris, Thomas Walsingham, and Asser's Life of King Alfred, all in folio; The Gospels of the Fower Euangelists, 1571, 4to; and A Saxon Homily on the Sacrament; pub. two translations from the Latin, 1562–87; The whole Psalter trans. into English Metre, 1557, 4to; set forth a Forme of Prayer, 1565, '66, 4to; wrote and pub. A Defence of Priests' Marriages, against Thomas Martin, (see p. 1232, ante,) 1562, 4to; and his name is prominently connected with the following works: 1. The Holie Bible, London, [printed] by Richard Jugge, 1568, fol. This translation was urged by him (in 1565) and undertaken and carried on under his inspection. Of the (at least) 15 translators engaged, eight were bishops: hence this ed. is known as "The Bishops' Bible,"—also called the "Great English Bible." For descriptions of it we refer to Dr. Cotton's List; Dibdin's Ames's Typ. Antiq., iv. 256; Dibdin's Ædes Althorp., i. 66, 67; Dibdin's Lib. Comp., 30, 31; Beloe's Anec., ii. 316; Bibl. De Antiquitate Britannicæ Ecclesiæ, Privilegiis Ecclesiæ Cantuar. cum Archiepiscopis eiusdem, 1572, fol.; Hanov., 1605, fol. (bad edit.;) Accurante Sam. Drake, Lon., 1729, fol. (good edit.) All in Latin. The extent of the archbishop's share in this work is a matter of doubt. Perhaps if we say that Rev. Dr. George Ackworth (see p. 34) and Rev. John Josselyn, one of the prelate's "antiquaries," compiled the work under Parker's eye, and principally from his own MSS., we shall come as near to the truth as possible. The book is now very rare: Strype notices only 5; but Dr. Drake found 211 copies,—the most of them imperfect. There is a valuable copy in the Lambeth Library, illustrated by original MSS., which appears to be the same as that noticed by Strype as in the possession of Archbishop Sancroft. Bindley's copy was sold for £45. See Dibdin's Ames's Typ. Antiq., iv. 126–130; Dibdin's Lib. Comp., 114, 115; Martin's Cat. of P. P. Books, ed. 1854, 1; Lon. Gent. Mag., 1856, ii. 53.

"I need not mention," says Strype, "this admirable book of the Lives of the Archbishops of Canterbury, which he might well style 'the British Antiquities,' there being such a plentiful treasure of choice antiquities collected together."

For further notices of Parker, see, in addition to the histories of England and of the Church of England, Strype's Life; The Life off the 70 Archbishopp off Canterbury presentlye sitting, Englished 1574, 12mo; Athen. Vol. xlix., 1852, 8vo, contains the Archbishop's Correspondence. The complete series, 55 vols. (including vol. of General Index) r. 8vo, 8vo, and 12mo, 1841–55, can now be had in cloth for £8 to £9. See Burton's Book-Hunter, Part 4. The archbishop would have highly enjoyed superintending the rarer works of this series for the press; for so great an enthusiast was he in the cause of Bibliomania that, Strype assures us, he kept constantly in his house

"Drawers of pictures, wood-cutters, painters, limners, writers, and book-binders: one of these was Lylye, an excellent writer, that could counterfeit any antique writing. Him the archbishop customarily used to make old books compleat."—Life of Parker, 415, 529.

He had agents at home and on the continent, picking up rare books and sending them to his library; and "one of these" (to quote Strype, supra) was our eccentric friend Stephen Batman, whose exploits in the Dominie Sampson line we have duly commemorated on p. 141 of this volume. The library there celebrated was left by the archbishop to Corpus Christi College. See NASMITH, JAMES, D.D.

But, if we admire the book-collector, (and we do admire the zeal of all intelligent book-collectors,) how shall we adequately reverence the memory of a man of whom Gibbon—not often surprised into rapturous eulogiums upon the clergy—thus speaks:

"Far different from such reformers was the learned and pious Matthew Parker, the first Protestant Archbishop of Canterbury, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth. His apostolical virtues were not incompatible with the love of learning; and while he exercised the arduous office, not of governing, but of founding the Church of England, he strenuously applied himself to the study of the Saxon tongue and of English antiquities."—Posthumous Works, iii. 566.

Parker, Richard Green, youngest of seven sons of Rt. Rev. Samuel Parker, D.D., late Bishop of the Prot. Epis. Church in Massachusetts, was b. in Boston, 1798, and graduated at Harvard College, 1817. Having taught in schools and academies in Hanover, Dedham, and Newburyport, in Massachusetts, and in Windsor, Vt., he was placed at the head of one of the public grammar-schools in Boston in 1827, where he continued until 1853, when he opened a school for young ladies, which he taught until 1858. Mr. Parker has been one of the most successful authors of school-books, (we lack space for the commendations before us,) all of which were written during hours stolen from the scanty leisure of the public service. His manuals are extensively used in the United States, and several of them have been reprinted in London. Of his works, some were published in Boston, and some in the city of New York. Each of the following works which bear his name is comprised in one volume 12mo. 1. Progressive Exercises in English Composition, Bost., 1832. More than seventy-five editions of this work have been published in this country, and, prior to 1854, fifteen in London. 2. Progressive Exercises in English Grammar, in three parts, Bost., 1834; Lon., 1837. This work was used exclusively in the Boston public schools for nine years. 3. Progressive Exercises in Rhetorical Reading, Bost., 1836; Lon., 1837. Afterwards expanded into The Rhetorical Reader, and published in N. York, 1845; last Lon. ed., 1857. 4. Aids to English Composition, Bost., 1846; 20th ed., N. York, 1852. 5. Outlines of General History, 1847; repub. in London; last Amer. ed., 1858. 6. Geographical Questions, N. York, 1848; last ed., 1855. 7. School Compendium of Natural and Experimental Philosophy, Bost., 1837; N. York, 1844; last Lon. ed., 1856. This work was introduced into the Boston public schools in 1838, and is still (1859) the text-book in those schools. 8. Juvenile Philosophy, N. York, 1850. 9. 1st Series of Five Readers, 1851. 10. The Word-Builder; or, First Lessons in Reading, 1855. 11. A new National Series of Readers and Spelling-Books, with James Madison Watson, of New York: completed in 1858. 12. A History of the Grammar School in the Easterly Parish of Roxbury, Roxbury, 1826. 13. An Elementary Treatise on Chemistry: in preparation, 1859. Mr. Parker was a frequent contributor to the early numbers of the Ladies' Magazine, when published in Boston. He has also written many critical notices, and other fugitive pieces, for several of the Boston newspapers.

Parker, Robert, a learned Puritan divine, Rector of Wilton, gave offence by publishing (1.) A Discourse against Symbolizing with Antichrist in Ceremonies, 1607; and fled to Holland, where he died, 1614. He also pub.: 2. De Descensu Domini Nostri Jesu Christi ad Infernos, Amst., 1611, 4to. 3. De Politica Ecclesiastica Christi, &c., Franc., 1616, 4to. 4. Discourse concerning the Puritans, 1641, 4to. 5. Parker, Samuel, D.D., 1640–1687, a native of Northampton, of Puritan extraction, was admitted of Wadham College, Oxford, in 1659, but subsequently removed to Trinity College. At the Restoration he changed his party, and attacked his old friends, the Puritans, with great zeal. His (1.) Discourse in Vindication of Bishop Bramhall and the Church of England from the Fanatic Charge of Popery, prefixed to the Bishop's Vindication of the Episcopal Clergy, 1672, 4to, elicited Andrew Marvell's Rehearsal Transposed, 1672–73, 2 vols. 12mo; which was answered by Parker in (2.) his Reproof to the Rehearsal Transposed, 1673, 8vo. But this controversy has been sufficiently noticed by us in our life of Andrew Marvell, ante. Those who would see more must refer to the authorities cited in that article, and to those which we shall presently indicate. In 1667 Parker became Chaplain to Archbishop Sheldon; in 1670, Archdeacon of Canterbury; in 1672, Preb. of Canterbury, and Rector of Ickham and Chartham, Kent; and in 1686 he received, as a reward for his willingness to aid James II. in introducing Popery, the bishopric of Oxford. The illegal attempt of the king to force Parker into the presidency of Magdalene College, Oxford, has been already referred to in our notice of Dr. John Hough, D.D., supra.

"A few weeks after the expulsion of the demies, Parker died in the house of which he had violently taken possession. Men said that his heart was broken by remorse and shame. He lies in the beautiful ante-chapel of the college; but no monument marks his grave."—LORD MACAULAY: Hist. of Eng., vol. ii. chap. viii. See, also, chap. vi.

In addition to the works above noted, he published: 3. Tentamina Physico-Theologica de Deo, Lon., 1665, 4to. 4. Account of the Platonick Philosophie, Oxon., 1666, 4to. 5. Parker, Samuel, son of the preceding, d. 1730, in his 50th year, described as "an excellent scholar, and a man of singular modesty," declined to take the oaths after the Revolution, and therefore never entered into orders. He appears to have had a situation in the Bodleian Library. He married the daughter of a bookseller in Oxford, and his son founded the well-known bookselling establishment to which the British and American public have so long been indebted for many valuable publications. Among the predecessors of the present firm—J. W. and John Henry Parker (see ante)—were Sackville Parker, grandson of Bishop Parker, who d. Dec. 10, 1796, in his 89th year, and Joseph Parker, nephew and successor to Sackville Parker. See Chalmers's Biog. Dict., xxiv. 126; Nichols's Lit. Anec., iii. 685. The subject of our present article was the author of—1. De Finibus; or, Tully's Five Books of Moral Ends; with the Annals of Thucydides and Xenophon; trans. into English, Oxon., 1702, 4to. 2. An Abridgment of the Ecclesiastical History of Eusebius, Socrates, Sozomen, and Theodoret; trans., 1707, 2 vols. 8vo. 3. Bibliotheca Biblica; being a Commentary upon all the Books of the Old and New Testament, gathered out of the genuine Writings of Fathers and Ecclesiastical Historians and Acts of Councils down to the Year of our Lord 451, &c., 1720–35, 6 (often bound in 5) vols. 4to; pub. anonymously: comes down to the end of Deuteronomy. The last vol. contains an account of the author and his writings, by Dr. Thomas Haywood, of St. John's College, to whom most of the dissertations in the work are ascribed. Rev. Thomas Warton (father of Thomas and Joseph Warton) and Dr. Hunt also contributed to the work. This is a valuable aid to those who wish to turn readily to patristical expositions on the Pentateuch. See Orme's Bibl. Bib. In a modern notice of this work now before us, the critic asserts that but, as he does not inform us to which of the many opinions advanced by these gentlemen he refers, we are but little benefited by this information. Parker also pub. his father's De Rebus sui Temporis: see PARKER, SAMUEL, D.D., No. 15.

Parker, Samuel, D.D., 1777–1804, a native of Portsmouth, N.H., a son of Judge William Parker, graduated at Harvard College, 1764; ordained by the Bishop of London, 1773; established as minister of Trinity Church, Boston, 1774, and rector of the same, 1779; continued steadfast to his parochial duties through the troubles of the Revolution; consecrated Bishop of the Eastern Diocese, Sept. 16, 1804, and d. on the 6th of Dec. following. He pub. the Annual Election Serm., 1793; a Serm. for the Benefit of the Boston Female Asylum, 1803, and several other occasional discourses. See Sprague's Annals, vol. v., Episcopalians, 1859, 296; PERRY, WILLIAM STEVENS.

Parker, Samuel Adams. Remarks upon Artificial Teeth, Birming., 1862, 12mo.

Parker, Theodore, b. about 1812, at Lexington, Mass.; a grandson of Captain John Parker, of Revolutionary memory; became a graduate of the theological school of Cambridge, Mass., in 1836, and subsequently settled at Roxbury as minister of the Second (Unitarian) Church. In 1841 he gave great offence to many of his theological friends by a Discourse on the Transient and Permanent in Christianity, (preached at the ordination of Mr. C. C. Shackford;) and in the next year he widened this breach by the publication of A Discourse of Matters relating to Religion. After an absence of between two and three years in Europe, Mr. Parker returned to Boston in the autumn of 1844, and exchanged pulpits for a time with the Rev. Mr. Sargent and Rev. Mr. Clarke, both Unitarian ministers. These three gentlemen all fell under the displeasure of many of their former adherents: Mr. Sargent lost his church; Mr. Clarke lost a large number of his congregation; and Mr. Parker yielded to the solicitations of several of his advocates, and established an independent service,—first in the Melodeon, and subsequently in the Music Hall. He styles himself Minister of the Twenty-eighth Congregational Society in Boston.

"Prêtre rationaliste sans église, théoricien politique sans parti, il agite dans ses sermons, devant un petit nombre de fidèles, toutes sortes de sujets, questions de morale ou de charité, économie politique et domestique, guerre, réforme, esclavage."—Dict. Univ. des Contemporains, par G. Vapereau, Paris, 1858, 1340.

This critic, who borrows at least a portion of his language from an American authority, (Duyckinck's Cyc. of Amer. Lit., 1856, ii. 556,) is misinformed as regards the "petit nombre de fidèles:" an audience of 3000 cannot be called a small congregation. How many of the hearers would wish to be reckoned disciples, is another matter, and one which it does not concern us to discuss. 1. Discourse on the Transient and Permanent in Christianity, Bost., 1841. Reviewed and condemned in the Christian Examiner. 2. Critical and Miscellaneous Writings, 1843, 12mo; Lon., 1849, 12mo; 2d ed., Bost., 1856, 12mo. These papers,—among which are essays on German Literature and on the Education of the Labouring Classes, and Thoughts on Labour, —or a portion of them, were originally published in The Dial and the Christian Examiner. Condemned, with the allowance of some merit in the style, by Brit. Quar. Rev., (supra;) commended, with censure of some of the sentiments, by Lon. Athen., 1849, 1006. 4. A Critical and Historical Introduction to the Canonical Scriptures of the Old Testament, trans. from the German of W. M. L. De Wette, and enlarged, 1843, 2 vols. 8vo; 1850, 2 vols. 8vo; 1859, 2 vols. 8vo. Some of Mr. Parker's mistranslations in the 1st edit. were pointed out, not in the most amiable spirit, in the North British Review for August, 1847. (See, also, Brit. Quar. Rev., xv. 457.) These, with a few others, were corrected in the stereotype plates for the 2d edit. The 3d ed. should have been more carefully compared with the original, from which the translation, in some instances, widely departs. It would not be fair to judge of Mr. Parker's present scholarship by a work which could be revised to great advantage. De Wette's Historico-Critical Introduction to the Canonical Books of the New Testament, trans. by Frederick Frothingham, has just been pub. in Boston, 1859, 8vo; his Theodore, trans. by J. T. Clarke, appeared in 1841, 2 vols. 12mo; and an English version of his Human Life, by Samuel Osgood, D.D., was pub. in the same city, (Boston,) 1842, 2 vols. 12mo. 5. Statutes and Orders of the Court of Chancery of the State of New York, recently revised and established, with some Account of the Courts of Equity, Law of Real Property, and Registration in the United States, North America, 1830, 8vo. Mr. Parkes was a contributor to the Westminster, London, and Retrospective Reviews. Mr. Herman Merivale completed, and in 1867 published in 2 vols. 8vo, The Memoirs, Correspondence, and Journals of Sir Philip Francis, on which Mr. Parkes had long been employed. Mr. Parkes believed Sir Philip Francis to be "Junius:" see Amer. Lit. Gaz., Mar. 1, 1867, 269, and July 1, 1867, 138. Reviews of these volumes will be found in Edin. Rev., Jan. 1868, and Blackwood's Mag., Feb. 1868. Mr. A. Hayward, Q.C., has in preparation (1868) more about Junius,—The Franciscan Theory Unsound. To our references on the Junius Question (pp. 1001–1005, supra) add Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1852, 205, where is quoted the following note, said to have been written by Francis on the margin of his copy of the famous Letters: "What a fuss about Junius,—a much-overrated writer!"

Parkes, Josiah, brother of the preceding, b. at Warwick, England, 1793, was in 1846 appointed Draining Engineer to the Office of Woods and Forests, and in 1856 to a similar office under the Board of Works. 1. Parkhurst, John, D.D., 1511–1574, Bishop of Norwich, 1560, was one of the translators of the Bishops' Bible, of which his share was the Apocrypha, from the Book of Wisdom to the end. Some of his letters were pub. by Strype, and others are still in MS. in the British Museum. 1. Epigrammata in Mortem duorum Fratrum, &c., Lon., 1552, 4to. 2. Epigrammata Seria, 1560, 4to. 3. Ludicra; siue Epigrammata Juuenilia, 1573, 4to. Anthony Wood and Blomefield erroneously call these epigrams as indecent as Martial's.

"On the Grecian rather than the Roman model,—not sparkling with wit, but grave and didactic."—ARCH. CHURTON.

4. Vita Christi, Carm. Lat. in lib. precum privat., 1578, 4to. See Tanner and Bale; Strype's Annals; Strype's Parker; Life of Jewel; Bliss's Wood's Athen. Oxon.; Churton's Nowell; Blomefield's Norwich; Neal's Puritan's; Beloe's Anecdotes; Archæol. ix.

Parkhurst, John, 1728–1797, a learned divine of the Hutchinsonian school; Fellow of Clare Hall, Cambridge; officiated as curate in his own chapel at Catesby, his very large fortune enabling him to dispense with compensation for clerical services. 1. A Serious and Friendly Admonition to the Rev. John Wesley, &c., Lon., 1753, 8vo. In opposition to the doctrine of assurance. 2. A Hebrew and English Lexicon without Points; to which is added A Methodical Hebrew Grammar without Points, &c., Lon., 1762, '78, '92, (last ed. corrected by the author,) 4to; 1799, r. 8vo; 1807, 8vo; 1813, '23, '30, r. 8vo.

"The value of which is sufficiently tested by the repeated impressions it has undergone."—Horne's Bibl. Bib., 1839, 208, q. v.

"He was a Hutchinsonian; but his Lexicon contains much valuable matter, as do those of Leigh, Stockius, Robertson, &c."—Bickersteth's C. S., 1845, 388.

"Too strongly marked by his Hutchinsonian peculiarities."—Orme's Bibl. Bib.

"A most entertaining and instructive book, though one knows not the Hebrew letters, which are easily learned by it."—J. M. Kay's Trans. of the S. Scriptures.

"Greatly enriched with quotations from authors ancient and modern, for the elucidation of the Old Testament."—Williams's C. P., 1843, 281.

"The wretched Lexicon of John Parkhurst."—N. Amer. Rev., xliv. 282: notice of Dr. Edward Robinson's trans. of Gesenius's Hebrew and English Lexicon of the Old Testament, Bost., 1836, 8vo. See, also, N. Amer. Rev., lxxii. 269, (by Moses Stuart.)

Gesenius has indeed superseded Parkhurst; but the curious dissertations in the Lexicon of the latter are by no means to be despised. See Works of Robert Hall, ed. 1853, v. 534. The Hebrew Grammar and the Short Chaldee Grammar prefixed to the work were pub. together in a separate vol., edited by James Prosser, 1840, r. 12mo.

"This is admitted by all competent judges to be the shortest and most compendious Hebrew Grammar without points extant in the English language."—Horne's Bibl. Bib., 1839, 201.

3. A Greek and English Lexicon to the New Testament, &c.; to which is prefixed a Plain and Easy Greek Grammar, 1769, '94, 4to; edited by the author's daughter, Mrs. Thomas, 1798, r. 8vo; 1800, '04, '09, '17, '22, '26, r. 8vo; a new ed., by Rev. Hugh James Rose, 1829, r. 8vo; by Rose and Dr. Major, 1845, 8vo; last ed., 1851, r. 8vo.

Bishop Jebb objects to the Hutchinsonian and etymological niceties of this Lexicon, but styles them

"Defects easily separated from the excellences of this able work, and infinitely outweighed by extensive erudition, refined taste, well-selected information, and, above all, unaffected piety."

"Mr. Rose has added at least one-third of new matter to this work. . . . He has conferred a high obligation on biblical students by the able manner in which he has revised, enlarged, and improved the work."—Horne's Bibl. Bib., 1839, 214.

"The services of no writer of the last century have been of so much importance to the English biblical student as those of Mr. Parkhurst. His Lexicons are an invaluable treasure of sacred criticism and sound learning."—Orme's Bibl. Bib., q. v.

"His two Scriptural Lexicons are so excellent in their way that they will last as long as the world; unless the new Goths of infidelity should break in upon us, and destroy, as they certainly wish to do, all the monuments of Christian learning."—REV. W. JONES, of Nayland.

4. The Divinity and Pre-Existence of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ demonstrated from Scripture, 1787, 8vo. This answer to Dr. Priestley was responded to in A Letter to Dr. Horne, &c., 1787, 8vo. See Chalmers's Biog. Dict., 24, 130; Lon. Gent. Mag., lxvii., lxx.

Parkman, Francis, Jr., son of the preceding, b. at Boston, Sept. 16th, 1823, graduated at Harvard in 1844, and two years later travelled upon the Western prairies, "with a view of studying the manners and characters of the Indians." On his return to the East he communicated the results of his observations to the public through the medium of a series of papers published in the (New York) Knickerbocker Magazine, and subsequently embodied these sketches in a volume under the title of (1.) The California and Oregon Trail; being Sketches of Prairie and Rocky Mountain Life, New York, 1849, 12mo, pp. 448; 4th ed., 1854, 12mo.

"It gives a more complete and accurate picture of Indian character and life, and of Indian warfare such as it was a century ago, than has yet appeared in print. And it is written with so much spirit and picturesque effect that it is as entertaining as a nursery-tale."—Francis Bowen: N. Amer. Rev., Oct. 1851, 495–529.

"This is one of the best-written histories that has been produced by the recent literary talent of America. . . . Here we have, in the form of authentic and detailed record, exactly such incidents as make the materials in the most delightful of Cooper's novels. The only fault we have to find with the author is that his style is often too grandiose for his subject."—Lon. Athen., 1851, 1252.

Also highly commended by the Westminster Rev., Spectator, and Britannia.

"It is an interesting work, containing the results of much patient research, and written in a flowing and attractive style."—George S. Hillard: F. C. Reader, 356.

The reader must refer also to a paper by Mr. Parkman himself, in the Christian Examiner, l. 417,—Indian Antiquities of North America. Mr. Parkman is entitled to the more credit for his persevering and thorough historical researches from the fact that they were pursued under the great disadvantage (so far as regards his own ease and comfort) of reading and writing by the eyes and hands of another. Parkyns, Sir Thomas, 1636–1741, of Bunny Park, Nottinghamshire, Justice of the Peace, amateur physician, philanthropist, scholar, and wrestler, educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, and was an object of regard to Sir Isaac Newton during his professorship in that seat of learning. As Frederick William of Prussia is said to have thought that men were born to drill and be drilled, so Sir Thomas Parkyns seems to have considered man as "a wrestling animal." To encourage the growth of this noble science, he gave to the world ΠΡΟΓΥΜΝΑΣΜΑΤΑ: The Inn-Play; or, Cornish Hugg Wrestler, &c., Lon., 1713; Notting., 1714; Lon., 1727, 4to; some on l. p. See Lon. Retrosp. Rev., 1825, xi. 160–173. The poem prefixed to this amusing work was written by Wm. Tunstall. Sir Thomas also pub. (2.) Queries and Reasons offered why the County Hall Jail,

&c. should be built in the County of Nottingham, 1724, 4to. The worthy baronet was the Man of Ross of his neighbourhood; physicked the sick without charge; wrestled with his coachmen and footmen, and commended them for their skill when they laid him low; made a remarkable collection of stone coffins, for which he had a curious fancy, and kept in repair, near the roadside, a bench for the weary traveller, with this philanthropic inscription:

"Hic sedeas, Viator, si tu defessus es ambulando."

This invitation must have been very acceptable at times to the learned pedestrian; but doubtless it as often quickened the steps of some honest rustic who mistook it for a scrap of law Latin denouncing summary vengeance on the trespasser. Even on his tomb the Wrestling Baronet is sculptured in his favourite attitude for giving a "back fall." Wood-cuts taken from this singular design are to be found in the Cornish Hugg Wrestler.

Parnell, Thomas, D.D., 1679–1718, a native of Dublin, and educated at Trinity College in that place, was in 1700 ordained a deacon; about three years afterwards was made a priest; became Archdeacon of Clogher in 1705, and married Anne Minchin, by whom he had two sons and a daughter; lost his wife in 1712, and sought consolation in the bottle; on the recommendation of Swift, obtained a prebend from Archbishop King in 1713, and in May, 1716, was presented to the vicarage of Finglass. Parnell was a great favourite with the Whigs, and when they went out of power was welcomed as an ally of the Tories. When Swift introduced him to Lord Bolingbroke, he observes in his journal

"It is pleasant to see one who hardly passed for anything in Ireland make his way here with a little friendly forwarding."

He wrote the Life of Homer (greatly altered, however, by Pope, who remarks, "It is still stiff, and was written much stiffer") prefixed to Pope's version of the Iliad; several papers in the Guardian, Spectator, &c., and many poems. Of the latter a collection was published, in accordance with the author's dying request, by Pope (sold to Lintot for £15) in 1722, 8vo; again, 1726, 8vo; Dubl., 1744, 12mo; with the Life of Parnell, by Goldsmith, Lon., 1770, 8vo; 1772, 8vo: see GOLDSMITH, OLIVER, p. 691, supra. Works in Prose and Verse, 12mo. Posthumous Works, containing Poems, Moral and Divine, and on various other Subjects, 1758, 8vo. The authenticity of this last-named edit. was questioned by Dr. Johnson, and Goldsmith would not add the poetical pieces in it to his edit. of Parnell's Poems, 1770, 8vo. They are now believed to be genuine, though inferior to those pub. by Pope in 1721. Parnell's Poetical Works, Glasg., 1765; 1786, 8vo. Poems by Johnson and Parnell, Lon., 1795, 4to. Nor should we omit to notice a publication in Parnell's lifetime, viz.: Homer's Battle of the Frogs and the Mice, trans., with the Remarks of Zoilus, and the Life of Zoilus, by Dr. Thomas Parnell, 1717, 8vo. Reprinted in Parnell's Poems, 1772, 8vo. This work was corrected by Pope, and annexed to his edition of the Odyssey. Dr. Johnson remarks that Goldsmith's

"criticism it is seldom safe to contradict. He bestows just praise upon the 'Rise of Woman,' the 'Fairy Tale,' and the 'Pervigilium Veneris;' but has very properly remarked that in the 'Battle of Frogs and Mice' the Greek names have not in English their original effect. . . . Goldsmith has not taken any notice of the 'Elegy to an Old Beauty,' which is perhaps the meanest, nor of the Allegory on Man, the happiest, of Parnell's performances. The hint of the 'Hymn to Contentment' I suspect to have been borrowed from Cleveland."—Johnson's Lives of the Brit. Poets.

The above-named pieces, and the Night-Piece on Death, (preferred by Goldsmith to Gray's Elegy,) Health, and the Hermit, are the best-known of Parnell's poems.

Charles James Fox, we are told by Mr. Rogers, was "much pleased with a song of Parnell's, 'My days have been so wondrous free,' [Love and Innocence,] particularly with the two first verses, which he repeated. Missed it in Aikin's Collection."—Recollections by S. Rogers, 1859, 17.

Dr. Parr wrote on a fly-leaf of his copy of Parnell's Poems, 1770, 8vo:

"For the story of the Hermit, generally but erroneously esteemed original, see Dr. Moore's Divine Dialogues, p. 321, and Howell's Familiar Letters, book iv. p. 435. Howell, in a Letter to the Marquis of Hertford, ascribes it 'to a noble and speculative knight, Sir Percy Herbert, in his late Conceptions to his Son.'" See HERBERT, SIR PERCY.

"This is all very well," adds a critic; "but Dr. Parr ought to have known that the story of Parnell's Hermit is as old as the Koran."

And Dr. Parr might also have known that Goldsmith, in his Life of Parnell, makes just the same references that he has made, and supposes the story of the Hermit to have been originally Arabian.

"Mr. Parnell's tale of the Hermit is conspicuous throughout the whole of it for beautiful descriptive narration. The manner of the Hermit's setting forth to visit the world; his meeting with a companion, and the houses in which they are successively entertained, of the vain man, the covetous man, and the good man, are pieces of very fine painting, touched with a light and delicate pencil, overcharged with no superfluous colouring, and conveying to us a lively idea of the objects."—Blair's Lects. on Rhetoric and Belles-Lettres, Lect. XL.: Descriptive Poetry.

See a criticism on the Hermit in Boswell's Life of Dr. Johnson, ed. 1848, r. 8vo, 569, 630. An edition on fine thick paper, with six illustrations and a Preface, sm. 4to, pp. 34, was published by the Amer. S. S. Union, Phila., in 1867, $1.25.

"The general character of Parnell is not great extent of comprehension or fertility of mind. Of the little that appears, still less is his own. His praise must be derived from the sweetness of his diction. In his verses there is more happiness than pains; he is sprightly without effort, and always delights, though he never ravishes; every thing is proper, yet every thing seems casual."—JOHNSON: Life of Parnell.

"Parnell is very happy in the selection of his images, and scrupulously careful in the selection of his subjects. His poetical language is not less correct than his subjects are pleasing. . . . He has considered the language of poetry as the language of life, and conveys the warmest thoughts in the simplest expression."—GOLDSMITH: Life of Parnell.

"The agreeable Parnell."—SMOLLETT: Hist of Eng., George I., Notes.

"I am free to confess that I can pass from the elder writers and still find a charm in the correct and equable sweetness of Parnell. Conscious that his diction has not the freedom and volubility of the better strains of the elder time, I cannot but remark his exemption from the quaintness and false metaphor which so often disfigure the style of the preceding age, nor deny my respect to the select choice of his expression, the clearness and keeping of his imagery, and the pensive dignity of his moral feeling."—CAMPBELL: Essay on English Poetry.

"Hic requiescit THOMAS PARNELL, S. T. P.
Qui sacerdos pariter et poeta,
Utrasque partes ita implevit
Ut neque sacerdoti suavitas pœtæ,

Parr, Samuel, D.D., 1747–1825, a native of Harrow-on-the-Hill, where his father was a surgeon and apothecary, after receiving his early education at Harrow School, in his 15th year became a most unwilling assistant to his sire in the preparation of medicines for the invalids of the neighbourhood. At length released from this distasteful employment, he was in 1765 entered at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, and pursued his studies there with great relish until obliged by the death of his father to seek for some immediate means of support. In 1767 we find him one of the assistants in Harrow School, and in 1771 he was a disappointed applicant for the mastership of that institution, vacated by the death of Dr. Robert Sumner. Subsequently he kept school successively at Stanmore, at Colchester in 1776, and at Norwich in 1778. In 1780 he was presented to the rectory of Asterby, Lincolnshire; in 1783 obtained the perpetual curacy of Hatton, Warwickshire, and at the same time received from Bishop Lowth a prebend in the Church of St. Paul. In 1790 he exchanged Hatton for the rectory of Wadenhoe, Northamptonshire, though he still continued to reside at the former place, and, indeed, there spent the remainder of his life, dividing his time between clerical duties, the labours of a school-master, the pleasures of authorship, and the enjoyment of his well-stocked library. In 1802 he was presented by Sir Francis Burdett to the rectory of Graffnam, Huntingdonshire; and in 1820 Queen Caroline appointed him her head chaplain.

As he was a most zealous advocate of the Whig party, it was naturally expected that ecclesiastical preferment would be urged on his behalf, and a popular poet of the day perhaps expressed the common sentiment in the following stanzas:

"Parr, Lords and Dukes come forward to command;
But who appears at Court the Doctor's friend?
His books his riches, and his only rule
A village pulpit or a country school."
The Poet's Fate, by George Dyer, 1797.

What effect these lines may have had upon the consciences of Parr's great friends, we know not; but it appears that about ten years later (in 1807) Parr made a very close approach to the episcopal bench:

"Had my friends continued in power," he tells us, "one fortnight longer, Dr. Hungerford was to have been translated to Hereford, and I was to have had Gloucester. My family arrangements were made."

But we may be allowed to express the opinion that if "Pigeon Paley" (as his Gracious Majesty George III. significantly denominated the author of the Principles of Moral and Political Philosophy) could not be made a bishop, it is not very probable that the eulogist of Priestley would ever have been invited to that eminence.

Dr. Parr gave to the world: 1. Christmas Day and Charity Schools; two Serms. on Gal. iv. 4, 1780, 4to. 2. Discourse on the Late Fast, by Phileleutherus Norfolciensis, 1781, 4to. 3. They occupy 112 pp., whilst the sermon itself (not short, to be sure) is contented with 51 pp. In the course of the Notes he expressed his dissent to some of the positions in Godwin's Political Justice; and Godwin responded in Thoughts occasioned by the Perusal of Dr. Parr's Spital Sermon, being a Reply to the Attacks of Dr. Parr, Mr. Mackintosh, [see MACKINTOSH, RT. HON. JAMES, M.D., LL.D., p. 1182, ante,] the Author of an Essay on Population, and Others, 1801, 8vo. But the Spital Sermon is signalized in a more memorable manner by the fact of its having been the basis of the first paper contributed by the Rev. Sydney Smith to the Edinburgh Review, (see vol. i., Jan. 1802, 18–24, and Smith's Works, 1854, i. 1–9.) The same reviewer also devotes in a separate article of the same number a few lines to Godwin's Thoughts, &c.

S. Smith, is repub. in Smith's Works, 1854, i. 317–326. Another review of the work, in which Parr is treated with just severity, was pub. by John Foster in the Eclectic Review, and is repub. in Foster's Critical Essays, 1856, 358–372. See, also, Lon. Quar. Rev., iv. 271, (by Sir Robert Grant.) Among Parr's best writings were his Epitaphs, reviews of books in the Monthly and Critical Reviews and the British Critic, and several biographical notices in the Gentleman's Magazine. His Dissertation on the word SUBLIME, at the end of Dugald Stewart's Philosophical Essays, has been admired, and (see Noctes Ambros., Oct. 1826) not a little ridiculed. After his death appeared Metaphysical Tracts by English Philosophers of the Eighteenth Century; prepared for the Press by the late Rev. Samuel Parr, D.D., 1837, 8vo. Reviewed in Edin. Rev., lxviii. 337, by Sir William Hamilton, and repub. in his Discussions on Philos. and Lit.

In 1828 appeared the Works of Samuel Parr, LL.D., &c.; with Memoirs of his Life and Writings, and a Selection from his Correspondence, by John Johnstone, M.D., &c., 8 vols. 8vo, pp. 5734, £7 7*s*.

Contents:—Vol. I. Memoirs. II. Sermons and Discourses, with Notes on the Spital Sermon. III. Notice of Combe's Horace, Remarks on Politics, Justification, Morals, &c., Warburton's Tracts, &c. IV. Lit., ix. 174, (his Later Days.)

It is well known that Parr contemplated a life of Dr. Johnson:

"I intended," he says, "to spread my thoughts over two volumes quarto; and if I had filled three pages the rest would have followed. Often have I lamented my ill fortune in not building this monument to the fame of Johnson, and (let me not be accused of arrogance when I add) my own."

Certainly Parr's life of the great lexicographer (of whom his close imitation procured him an undignified nickname) would have presented an amusing contrast to Boswell's gossiping pages. Nothing less than the dignity of Tacitus and the oratory of Cicero would have been deemed worthy of "the great argument." The classical habiliments of Johnson, however, were ill suited to the lesser dimensions of his imitator. With Johnson the ore rotundo style was natural; with Parr it was an awkward affectation.

"Of flexibility Parr's style has none; it is totally deficient in the grand secret and capital charm of first-rate composition, light and shade, intention and remission. Instead of treating common things in a common way, and reserving great efforts for great occasions, Parr's mind seems always on the stretch. Nihil solet leniter, nihil definite, nihil explicate dicere."—Green's Diary of a Lover of Lit.: Lon. Gent. Mag., 1834, Pt. 1, 140.

"His usual sonorous tympany of words."—De Quincey: Philos. Writers, i. 110.

"Old Whishaw mentioned an amusing instance of Dr. Parr's stilted phraseology. In addressing a well-known lawyer (whose name I now forget) after some great forensic display he had made, Parr said, 'Sir, you are incapable of doing justice to your own argument; you weaken it by diffusion and perplex it by reiteration.'"—T. Moore's Memoirs, &c., 1856, vii. 153.

"The Doctor is never simple and natural for a single instant. Every thing smells of the rhetorician. He never appears to forget himself, or to be hurried by his subject into obvious language. Every expression seems to be the result of artifice and intention. . . . Why should Dr. Parr confine this eulogomania to the literary characters of this island alone? In the University of Benares, in the lettered kingdom of Ava, among the Mandarins at Pekin, there must, doubtless, be many men who have the eloquence of Βαρρουος, the feeling of Ταιλωρος, and the judgment of Ωκηρος, of whom Dr. Parr might be happy to say that they have profundity without obscurity,—perspicuity without prolixity,—ornament without glare,—terseness without barrenness,—penetration without subtlety,—comprehensiveness without digression,—and a great number of other things without a great number of other things."—Rev. Sydney Smith: Edin. Rev., i. 22, 23: Dr. Parr's Spital Sermon.

Of whom does this remind one?—

". . . Your reasons at dinner have been sharp and sententious: pleasant without scurrility, witty without affection, audacious without impudency, learned without opinion, and strange without heresy."

So discourseth Sir Nathaniel in Love's Labour Lost, Act V. Sc. 1.

Did the great Shakspeare imagine a Parr of the future?

Southey's comment on Smith's critique was, "When they abuse Parr's style, it is rather a knock at the dead lion, old Johnson," (Letter to C. W. W. Wynn, Dec. 22, 1802;) but this imputation is unjust.

As regards his learning, Bishop Butler did the same office for Parr that Parr performed for Fox: each made the subject of his eulogy ridiculous by tumid exaggeration. The bishop does not scruple to say of Parr,

"As to his learning, it was the most profound, and, I may add, the most varied and extensive, of any man of his age."

We are sorry to add that a much calmer critic, the Rev. Mr. Blunt, goes so far as to say that "Many of Parr's works could have been produced by no other man alive."—Lon. Quar. Rev., xxxix. 314.

This is all in very bad taste.

On the other hand, the author of the Pursuits of Literature demanded, in 1797,

"What has Dr. Parr written? A sermon or two, rather long; a Latin preface to Bellendenus, (rather long too,) consisting of a cento of Latin and Greek expressions, applied to political subjects; another Preface to some English Tracts; and two or three English Pamphlets about his own private quarrels; and this man is to be compared with Dr. Samuel Johnson!!"—7th ed., 219.

"An excellent clergyman in his parish, an excellent schoolmaster in his school, but in his character of a wit and an author one of the most genuine feather-beds of humbug that ever filled up a corner in the world."—Christopher North: Noctes Ambros., Aug. 1824.

Out of regard to the memory of the Doctor, we have quoted only the most respectful portion of the comments before us. Odoherty is much more severe than the courteous Christopher. But let us balance these strictures by the eulogium of an authority whose "name was ne'er more bruited in men's mouths than now," and that not for what he is known, but for what he is supposed, to have done:

"I admired him as a great, illustrious, faulty human being, whose character, like all the noblest works of human composition, should be determined by its excellencies, not by its defects."—Sir Philip Francis's Speech.

What Mr. De Quincey thinks of Parr's literary pretensions we have already shown the reader, in our notice of Bellenden, William, p. 162, supra.

The truth is, we imagine, that Parr was a first-rate Latin scholar, more than a second-rate Greek scholar, and a third-, fourth-, and fifth-rate scholar, and no scholar at all, in the various other branches of knowledge included in belles-lettres, metaphysics, and the exact sciences. Sydney Smith declares that "he left nothing behind him worth leaving," (Works, i. 1, n.;) but Lord Macaulay, with a more lenient judgment, characterizes the results of his labours as "A vast treasure of erudition, a treasure too often buried in the earth, too often paraded with injudicious and inelegant ostentation, but still precious, massive, and splendid."—Crit. and Histor. Essays, ed. 1854, iii. 180; from Edin. Rev., Oct. 1841, 242.

"The late Dr. Parr, whose erudition was as unexclusive as profound."—Sir William Hamilton: Edin. Rev., Jan. 1839, 338.

Lawrence's Treat. on Hernia, with an Appendix; and contributed medical and surgical papers to the Eclectic Repertory, (of which he was one of the editors,) the North American Medical and Surgical Journal, &c.

"Perhaps no one was personally known more extensively in the city, or had connected himself by a greater variety of beneficent services with every ramification of society."—Dr. George B. Wood's Memoir of Dr. Parrish, delivered before the Medical Society of Philadelphia, Oct. 23, 1840: abridged in Williams's Amer. Med. Biog., 418–441. See, also, Wood's Introd. Lects., &c., 1859, 387.

Parrish, Joseph, Jr., M.D., b. in Philadelphia, 1818, son of the preceding, and Principal of the Institution for Feeble-Minded Children at Germantown, Penna., is the author of "several luminous reports on the subject of Idiocy, which have claimed extensive notices in medical journals," and of some valuable medical papers, principally pub. in the New Jersey Medical Reporter. This periodical was established by Dr. Parrish (at Burlington, N.J.) in 1847, and he retained his editorial connection with it until 1855,—assisted by Dr. S. W. Butler from the year 1850. The Reporter—now called The Medical and Surgical Reporter, and issued since Oct. 1858, weekly, at Philadelphia—has been for some time past edited by Drs. Butler and R. J. Levis. It was at first a quarterly, and subsequently a monthly, journal. It presents the first successful attempt made in America to establish a weekly medical journal.

"It is almost superfluous to say that the conduct of Captain Parry on the late, as on all former occasions, appears to have been above praise. . . . There is something in the failures of Captain Parry that compensates the want of success and that reconciles us to the disappointment."—SIR JOHN BARROW: Lon. Quar. Rev., xxxvii. 524, March, 1828: Review of Parry's Fourth Voyage.

"Without displaying any great power of intellect, he fairly won his way to distinction, and was personally beloved by sailors of all ranks, as well as by his family and friends. He was, emphatically, a good and pious man. Nor were his services few and insignificant. He may be said to have familiarized the navigation of the Arctic to the fancy of the British seaman. . . . He was, from his youth to his dying day, an example to the service, and, in other respects, a most meritorious citizen."—Lon. Athen., Feb. 14, 1857, 206.

Parsons, or Persons, Robert, alias Robert Cowbuck, &c., 1546–1610, a native of Nether Stowey, Somersetshire, educated at, Probationer, Fellow, and Chaplain Fellow of, Tutor, Bursar, and Dean in, Balliol College, Oxford, after distinguishing himself by his zeal for the Protestant religion, in May, 1575, became a member of the Society of Jesus, and was admitted to the English college of that order in Rome. He subsequently joined Edmund Campian (p. 334, ante) in a mission to England, and there long laboured with great assiduity and considerable success, both by private exhortation and the frequent and vigorous use of the pen, on behalf of the religious and political doctrines of the communion to which he was attached. He contributed to the elevation of Cardinal Alan (p. 44, ante) to the high position in which he was not unwilling to succeed him; but Clement VIII. was not like-minded in the matter. Of the abilities of Parsons there can be no intelligent question; respecting his character, labours, and many publications, (some of which appeared under the names of Doleman, Howlett, &c.,) detailed information will be found in Dr. James's Jesuits' Downfall, 1612; Bliss's Wood's Athen. S., [Dean Stanhope,] 1700, 8vo. Of the eds. altered by Stanhope to suit the Protestant reader, that of 1782, 8vo, is called the best. For notices of eds., see Lowndes's Bibl. Man., 1410.

"This is a most curious volume, as illustrative of the reign of Queen Elizabeth. It was written by Robert Parsons, the Jesuit, on the publication of the edict against the Catholics. The work commences with an abstract of the lives and actions of Lord Chancellor Bacon, Dudley Earl of Leicester, Sir F. Walsingham, Sir C. Hatton, and Sir W. Cecil, (afterwards Lord Burleigh,) against all of whom the writer is very furious. It also contains some singular notices of Sir Francis Drake and Sir Richard Grenville, described as pirates and robbers; also, of Mary Queen of Scots, Henry VIII., Anne Boleyn, Earls of Arundel and Essex, Cardinal Alan, Pole, Cranmer, Throckmorton, W. Stanton, Sir T. Wyat, Udal, Hacket, Bishop Jewel, Earl of Seymour, Sir T. Pope, R. Gage, Duke of Hamilton, Douglas family; Lord Darnley, husband of the Queen of Scots; Earl of Sussex's Expedition to Scotland, also Lord Scrope's defeat of the Spanish Armada; Dukes of Somerset and Norfolk, Sir T. Howard, Sir John Perrott, Viceroy of Ireland; origin of the Tudors, Owen Tudor, Lady Jane Grey, Lady Morley, T. Sherwood; account of the different persons who suffered for their religion in England."

A late eminent authority, referring to this answer and that of F. Crosswell to the edict of Elizabeth, remarks,

"It is difficult to speak of these two Tracts with the severity which they deserve. They might please the King of Spain, and uphold his hope of the conquest of England, but they were calculated to irritate Elizabeth and increase the persecution of the Catholics."—Dr. Lingard.

5. A Conference about the next Succession to the Crowne of England; divided into two Partes; published by R. Doleman, 1594, 16mo; 1681, 8vo. Copies of the 1st ed. have been sold for £15. Portions have been frequently reprinted. The work elicited several answers: see Lowndes's Bibl. Man., 1410; Paget, Charles. The object of the Conference, of which Parsons, Cardinal Alan, and Sir Francis Englefield were the authors, was to support the title of the Infanta in preference to that of James I. The printer was hanged, drawn, and quartered, and it was made high treason even to own a copy: therefore the first edition is very rare.

"This is a singular book, and well worth the attention of inquisitive minds, as it contains very many exceedingly curious historical and genealogical particulars."—Brydges's Cens. Lit.

6. Confutation of a Vaunting Challenge made by O. E. unto N. D., by W. R., 1603, 8vo. 7. An Answer to O. E. whether Papists or Protestants be True Catholics, 1603, 8vo. 8. Treatise of the Three Conversions of England from Paganisme to Christian Religion, by N. D.; in three parts: Pts. 1 and 2, St. Omers, 1603, each 8vo; Pt. 3, 1604, 8vo.

"The whole seems to have been designed in answer to Mr. Fox, [Acts and Monuments,] whom he professedly opposes throughout a great part of his second and third volumes. He represents that author as a person very ignorant and very dishonest, perverting the sense in some of his quotations, and mistaking it in others."—Bp. Nicolson: Eng. Hist. Lib., ed. 1776, 91. And see p. 92. See Fox, or Foxe, John.

We are told that Parsons put Doleman's name to this book because

"Doleman was an honest secular priest, who hated such traitorous doctrines, and Father Parsons hated him, and (to make him odious) did use his name as if Doleman had been the author, when Parsons indeed made the book."—Bishop Barlow.

The full titles of these three vols. of Parsons and of Matthew Sutcliffe's (Dean of Exeter) two treatises in answer to them (both 1606, 4to) will be found in W. Strong's Catalogue of English Divinity, 1829, Nos. 9550–9553. The titles alone occupy fifty lines! 9. Forerunners of Bel's Downfal; or, An Answer to T. Bel's Downfall of Popery, 1605, 8vo; 1606. 10. The Jesuit's Memorial for the Intended Reformation of England under the first Popish Prince, &c.; with an Introduction, Animadversions, and Memoirs of Father Parsons's Life, by Edward Gee, Lon., 1690, 8vo.

"Mr. Gibbon never talked with me on the subject of his conversion to Popery but once; and then he imputed his change to the works of Parsons the Jesuit, who lived in the reign of Elizabeth, and who, he said, had urged all the best arguments in favour of the Roman Catholic religion."—Lord Sheffield: Gibbon's Miscell. Works, 1837, 2, n.

Parsons, Samuel H., drowned in the Big Beaver River, 1789, aged 52, was a Major-General in the American Revolutionary army in 1787, a Judge of the Northwestern Territory, and in 1789 Chief Judge. He pub. a paper on the Antiquities of the Western States, in Trans. Amer. Acad., vol. ii. See Dr. Hildreth's Biog. Mem.

Parsons, Samuel H. The Grammatical Reader, Phila., 1836, 18mo.

Parsons, Theophilus, LL.D., 1750–1813; a native of Newbury, Mass.; graduated at Harvard College, 1769; studied law with Judge Bradbury, at Falmouth, (now Portland,) Maine, and kept the grammar-school at that place; admitted to the Bar, 1774; married, and removed to Newburyport, 1780, and there resided for twenty years; removed to Boston in 1800, and in 1806 succeeded Chief-Justice Dana as Chief-Justice of the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts. He was a man of great learning, exercised a wide influence as a Federalist leader, and filled a number of important public posts. He pub. nothing under his own name. Besides his decisions, which fill vols. ii. to x. of the Massachusetts Reports, the most important work he ever gave to the press was The Essex Result, which was a report made by him in 1776 to a convention in Essex county, Massachusetts. The ablest men of the country have recognized in this work of a young man not only the earliest but the fullest and clearest exposition that had been made of the principles upon which republican institutions must be founded. This treatise had an important influence upon the political documents which followed it in Massachusetts and other States. It has been recently republished in the Memoir of the author by his son, noticed in the next article, to which instructive work we refer the reader for further particulars respecting a jurist who, in the language of his successor, Chief-Justice Parker, was "for more than thirty years acknowledged as the great man of his time," and who, in the opinion of the same biographer, had he lived in England would have been made Lord Chancellor or Lord Chief-Justice. See Charge delivered by Chief-Justice Parker, in Mass. Reports, vol. x. 521; Parker, Isaac, LL.D., No. 2, (ante;) Parker, C.-J., Inaug. Address, 1816; Knapp's Biog. We must not omit to notice, for caution's sake, a book entitled Commentaries on American Law, New York, 1836, 8vo.

"This volume is a selection of Judge Parsons's Decisions, omitting the facts of the Cases. The book is not countenanced by the Bar, who have uniformly regarded it as an imposition."—Charles Sumner: 17 Amer. Jur., 470.

"The volume is very imperfect and unsatisfactory, and has not been much used by the profession."—Theophilus Parsons, Dane Prof.: Letter to the Author of this Dictionary, April 15, 1859.

Parsons, Theophilus, LL.D., son of the preceding, b. in Newburyport, Mass., May 17, 1797; graduated at Harvard College, 1816; after passing a short time in Europe, studied law with William Prescott, and practised his profession, principally in Boston, until 1848, when he was appointed Dane Professor of Law in Harvard University, which office he still retains, (1869.) "Among other merits of no ordinary magnitude, it has the very important one of being a sound and successful exhibition of the American Law of Contracts. [Of that part which relates to the clause in the Constitution of the United States respecting the obligation of contracts, Judge Curtis says,] I am not aware that any commentator has treated it at all carefully until you did so. I look upon that part of the work as of first-rate importance, not only to students, but to lawyers and judges."—Hon. B. R. Curtis, one of the Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States.

"We feel bound to say that we regard this work, taken as a whole, clear in statement, diligent in citation, accurate in detail, commendable in research, excellent in learning, simple in style, and altogether the most carefully considered and best-prepared exhibition of the comprehensive law of Contracts that has ever yet been presented in the English language."—American Law Register.

7. Memoir of Chief-Justice Parsons; with Notices of some of his Contemporaries, 1859, 12mo. A work of interest and value.

"We have seldom read a biography which has given us so vivid a perception of the manners, habits, and character of its subject. . . . There is an ease amounting almost to carelessness in the diction of the book and in the arrangement of the material; but it is the graceful ease of a man of taste and letters, and constitutes not a defect, but, in our esteem, a crowning merit."—A. P. Peabody, D.D.: N. Amer. Rev., July, 1859, 232–244. See, also, Oct. 1859, 574.

"Judge Parsons was fortunate in a son capable of doing that well which even if ill done would have been interesting. . . . Mr. Parsons has done a real service to our history and letters in this volume."—Atlantic Monthly, July, 1859, 133.

"The Life of Chief-Justice Parsons is in everybody's hands, and much relished on account of the political and legal history blended with the personal narrative and the anecdotes which enliven the technical details."—H. T. Tuckerman.

Parsons, Thomas William, M.D., b. 1819, at Boston, a son of Thomas W. Parsons, M.D., of that city, travelled in Europe in 1836–37, and again in 1847–48. The results of his observations have to some extent been embodied in the poetry which he has from time to time given to the world. In 1843 he published a volume (Boston, 8vo, pp. 83) containing a creditable translation of The First Ten Cantos of the Inferno of Dante, (see N. Amer. Rev., lvii. 496; Lon. Athen., 1844, 267; Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1844, 108;) and he has since completed a translation of the whole work, which we hope will ere long make its appearance. See ROSSETTI, DANTE GABRIEL, for Dante Literature. In 1854 he published a volume of Poems, (reprinted in 1855, and again in 1856,) the most if not all of which had previously appeared in the Knickerbocker and other periodicals. Among the best-known contents of this volume are Ghetto di Roma; Stewart's Burial; Lines on the Death of Daniel Webster; Letters; Campanile di Pisa; The Shadow of the Obelisk; and Hudson River. This volume has been enthusiastically commended both at home and abroad.

"His verses are clear alike to the ear and the brain, and their old-fashioned music is in keeping with their vigorous sense, fine humour, sharp but not ungenial wit, and delicate though always manly sentiment."—Griswold's Poets and Poetry of America, 16th ed., 1855, 559.

"The book displays more culture than enthusiasm,—more of the poetic art than of poetic fire. Its author shows a rare wealth of resource derived equally from study and from travel,—from classic fountains and from the literature and life of the present day."—A. P. PEABODY, D.D.: N. Amer. Rev., Jan. 1855, 266.

"Here, like a ripe mouthful in an otherwise green and detestable peach, amid a dreary mass of tedious writers, we come to a man of taste and learning, who can write good flowing verse, scintillating with humour; national, yet not vulgar: one who can tell a story, and invent one too, and no borrowing, either."—Lon. Athen., 1856, 775.

In 1867 a number of Dr. Parsons's friends privately printed a volume containing between 20 and 30 of his poems, under the title of The Magnolia, Cambridge, 4to, pp. 58; in the same year his translation of 17 cantos of a portion of Dante was privately printed, press of John Wilson & Sons, Boston; and in Sept. 1867 was published The First Canticle (Inferno) of the Divine Comedy of Dante Alighieri, translated by T. W. Parsons, with Portrait and Illustrations, Boston, De Vries, Ibarra & Co., sm. 4to, pp. 216, $15, or without illustrations, $6. He has also written for the Atlantic Monthly, and in the present year (1868) has contributed to The Galaxy.

Parsons, Usher, M.D., of Providence, R. Island, b. in Alfred, Maine, 1788; whilst Surgeon in the U. States Navy was in 1821 appointed Prof. of Anatomy in Dartmouth College; lectured one season, and then accepted the professorship of Anatomy and Surgery in Brown University, where he lectured for five seasons; in 1831 gave one Course of Lectures on Obstetrics in Jefferson College, Philadelphia; elected President of the R. Island Med. Soc., 1847–48–49; elected (first) Vice-President of the National Medical Association, 1853; d. Dec. 19, 1868. 1. Sailors' Physician, Camb., 8vo, 1826; 4th ed., Providence, 1851, 8vo. The 2d, 3d, and 4th eds. were entitled Physician for Ships. 2. Lecture on Anatomy and Physiology, 1826, 8vo. 3. "It is creditable to the skill and patience of Mr. Parsons, who has formed it out of old family papers and documents, some of which, from dirt, water, fire, and other mischances, were almost illegible. It constitutes, as will have been seen from our analysis and extracts, a perfect little history of itself, of equal interest on either side of the Atlantic."—Lon. Athen., 1855, 1114, (same in Bost. Liv. Age, xlvii. 753.)

Also commended in Whitmore's Amer. Genealog., 1862, 84, and Hist. Mag., (Boston,) Feb. 1857, 63. See PEPPERELL, SIR WILLIAM.

Dr. Parsons was also the author of a number of medical treatises, biographical sketches, and speeches, pub. in pamphlet form; of Notes on Commodore O. H. Perry, contained in Burges's History and in McKenzies' Life; and of papers in the Phila. Jour. of Med. Sci.; the Trans. Nat. Med. Assoc.; Naval Lyceum; Silliman's Jour.; N. "Almost a model Biography."—DR. R. SHELTON MACKENZIE.

"By shaking the dust off half a dozen ponderous volumes—cutting out a leaf here and there—picking through and revising a heap of yellow love-letters—touching the springs of secret drawers, and holding up to the light certain locks of soft hair, and sly, laughing miniatures, and gathering what friends and enemies have to report in England, America, France, and Sweden—we obtain a biography of more than ordinary interest; contradictory enough in phenomena of good and evil; a romance in real life, or the story of an American Barry Lindon."—Fraser's Magazine, March, 1858.

"Mr. Parton has done a good service in recalling a character which had wellnigh passed out of popular thought, though not entirely out of popular recollection. As to the manner in which this service has been performed, it is impossible to speak very highly."—Atlantic Monthly, March, 1858.

"But, while thus either unconsciously or satirically jeopardizing the very cause he professes to defend in the body of his narrative, at the outset and toward the close he more decisively repudiates the popular judgment. . . . Such assertions as that Burr's 'worst fault was a reckless generosity in the use of money,' and that, on the whole, he was a better man than Hamilton, are not only unsustained by patent facts, but so absolutely contradict other generalizations of the biographer as to nullify his authority as an able critic and consecutive reasoner."—H. Parton, Mrs. Sara P., (Fanny Fern,) formerly Miss Willis, a native of Maine, was married in 1834 to Charles H. Eldredge, of Boston, who died in 1846, and subsequently, in 1855, to James Parton, (supra.) The popularity of this lady's writings may be judged of from the following statement of the sale of her volumes. We are indebted for these facts to Hart's Female Prose Writers of America, to which the reader is referred for further particulars and specimens of Fanny Fern's style. Her first volume, Fern Leaves, First Series, was pub. June 4, 1853; the second, Little Ferns for Fanny's Little Friends, was issued December 5, 1853, and the third, the Second Series of Fern Leaves, May 25, 1854. The sale of these works, up to June 1, 1854, was in the United States as follows:—

First Series Fern Leaves	70,000
Little Ferns for Fanny's Little Friends	32,000
Second Series Fern Leaves	30,000
Total sale in the United States	132,000
Sale in Great Britain:—
First Series Fern Leaves	29,000
Little Ferns for Fanny's Little Friends	19,000
Total sale in Great Britain	48,000
Total sale in Great Britain and the United States	180,000

"She dips her pen in her heart, and writes out her own feelings and fancies. She is no imitator, no dealer in second-hand wares. Her inspiration comes from nature, not from books. She dares to be original. She has no fear of critics or of the public before her eyes. She conquers a peace with them by sheer force of audacity."—Hart's Female Prose Writers of America.

In 1854 Fanny Fern gave to the world her first novel, entitled Ruth Hall. This work excited much critical discussion; a condemnatory review will be found in the New York Prot. Epis. Quar. Rev. for April, 1855. The author has also been severely censured in other quarters. It had an extraordinary sale, over fifty thousand copies being sold within eight months after its publication. In the autumn of 1855 her second novel, entitled Rose Clark, was issued, which also met with great success. In 1856 her second book for juveniles, the Play-Day Book, was issued; and in 1857 her volume entitled Fresh Leaves was published. The last-named work contains a story, entitled Fanny Ford, originally written for the New York Ledger, and for which the authoress received the large sum of one hundred dollars a column. Many of her sketches have appeared in the New York Ledger, with which she had a permanent engagement. The Life and Beauties of Fanny Fern appeared in London, 1855, 12mo. Her last publication was Folly as it Flies: Hit at by Mrs. S. Parton, (Fanny Fern,) N. York, 1868, 12mo.

Paterson, Samuel, 1728–1802, one of the first—both in order of time and talents—of English bibliographers, gained some reputation as an author and bookseller, but more as a librarian (to the Marquis of Lansdowne) and maker of catalogues. Paterson, William, the projector of the Banks of England and Scotland, and of the settlement of Darien, was born at Skipmyre, parish of Tinwald, Dumfriesshire, Scotland, about 1660. He lived too long for his fortunes, and died poor, Jan. 22, 1719. He has been variously represented as a buccaneer and a missionary in the West Indies; was certainly at one time a merchant in London, and as unquestionably a man of energy, intelligence, and skill in argumentation. For more satisfactory information concerning this eminent projector and his works, we must refer the reader to Chambers and Thomson's Biog. Patmore, Coventry, son of Mr. P. G. Patmore, (infra,) b. July 23, 1823, at Woodford, county of Essex, England, has gained considerable reputation as a poet. 1. Poems, 1844, fp. 8vo. The principal poems in the volume are The River, Julien, The Woodman's Daughter, Sir Hubert, and Lilian, a Poem for 1844. The collection was commended by New Month. Mag, Jerrold's Mag., Hunt's Lon. Jour., &c., but condemned in unmeasured terms by Blackwood's Magazine for Sept. 1844, and certainly not eulogized in the London Athenæum for August 10th of the same year. In the article last referred to, certain resemblances between the poetry of Mr. Patmore and that of James Russell Lowell (see the Poems of the latter, pub. in 1844) are pointed out; but the latter writer receives more praise and escapes with fewer corrections and admonitions than are bestowed nearer home. 2. Tamertown Church Tower, and other Poems, (being a second edition of Poems, with large additions,) 1853, fp. 8vo; 2d ed. same year. The critic of the Athenæum complains that in this vol. Mr. Patmore has not sufficiently profited by the lessons given (supra) in 1844, and remarks that the poet in "The leading work, [Tamertown Church Tower,] now for the first time before us, manifests an occasionally provoking perversity in its style and treatment, which impairs its really great merit."—April 9, 1853, 442.

The review, however, is, on the whole, highly complimentary.

"Poèmes domestiques, ont été très-loués pour le charme des idées et des tableaux, et l'élégance du style."—Dict. univ. des Contemporains, par G. Vapereau, Paris, 1858, 1348.

"Of modern poetry, keep to Scott, Wordsworth, Keats, Crabbe, Tennyson, the two Brownings, Lowell, Longfellow, and Coventry Patmore, whose 'Angel in the House' is a most finished piece of writing, and the sweetest analysis we possess of quiet, modern domestic feeling; while Mrs. Browning's 'Aurora Leigh' is, as far as I know, the greatest poem which the century has produced in any language."—Ruskin's Elements of Drawing.

Patrick, Saint, the Apostle of Ireland, a native of the town of Bonaven Taberniæ, (i.e. Kilpatrick, on the mouth of the river Clyde, between Dunbriton and Glasgow,) Scotland, was b., according to Usher and Tillemont, A.D. 372, and d., according to Tillemont, in 455; according to Nennius, in 464; according to Usher, in 493. In his 16th year he was carried into captivity to Ireland, and remained in this condition for six or seven years; when, escaping to Tours, in France, he was made by his uncle a canon regular of his church. He was subsequently ordained a bishop (when his name was changed from Maur to Patricius) by Pope Celestine, and in 432 sailed with upwards of twenty attendants on a mission to Ireland. He is said to have resided seven years in Ulster, seven in Munster, and seven in Connaught. According to Nennius, he laboured in Ireland for a period of forty years. It is asserted by some authorities that he returned home in his old age and died in his native town, (Kilpatrick signifying the burial-place of Patrick;) and by others, (and Rev. Alban Butler is among these,) that he died and was buried at Down, in Ulster. His festival is marked on the 17th of March in the Martyrology of Bede. As a writer, this excellent man is best known by his Confessio and his Epistola ad Coroticum. These, with other Latin pieces ascribed to him, were pub. by Sir James Ware, London, 1656, 8vo, under the following title: S. Patrico, qui Hibernos ad Fidem Christi convertit, adscripta Opuscula, quorum alia nunc primum ex antiquissimis Codicibus, in Lucem emissa sunt, a Jacobo Warræo, Eq. Aur. See, also, Charta S. Patrick, Symon, D.D., 1626–1707, a brother of John Patrick, D.D., (supra,) a native of Gainsborough, Lincolnshire; admitted a Sizar of Queen's College, Cambridge, 1644; elected Fellow, 1648; received orders from Bishop Hall about 1651; obtained the living of Battersea, 1658; Rector of St. Paul's, Covent Garden, 1662, and refused to leave his flock during the plague; Preb. of Westminster, 1672; Dean of Peterborough, 1679; Bishop of Chichester, 1689; trans. to Ely, 1691. This excellent man and excellent writer was the author of more than thirty occasional sermons,—many of them funereal and charges—pub. separately, in 4to, between 1652 and 1704; of some admirable devotional treatises, &c., and of paraphrases and commentaries on the historical and poetical portions of the Scriptures,—from Genesis to the Song of Solomon, both inclusive. These Commentaries were originally pub. in 10 vols. 4to., viz.: Genesis, 1 vol., 1695; Exodus, 1 vol., 1697; Leviticus, 1 vol., 1698; Numbers, 1 vol., 1699; Deuteronomy, 1 vol., 1700; Joshua, Judges, and Ruth, 1 vol., 1702; two Books of Samuel, 1 vol., 1703; two Books of Kings, 1 vol., 1705; two Books of Chronicles, Ezra, Nehemiah, and Esther, 1 vol., 1706; Job, Psalms, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, and the Song of Solomon, paraphrased, 1 vol., 1710. Reprinted collectively, and with Lowth's Commentary, from time to time. Abridged ed. of Patrick's Commentary, 1725, 4 vols. 8vo. We have already remarked that Patrick's commentaries are generally pub. with those of Richard Arnald, Moses Lowman, William Lowth, and Daniel Whitby, and have noticed editions of this comprehensive work, and quoted opinions on Arnald, Lowman, Lowth, and Patrick's portions of it: see pp. 69, 779, 947, 1139, 1141, supra. The folio eds. are in large type, and therefore sometimes preferred; but none of the sets in this size contain Lowman, and but few include Arnald. When Arnald is included, the whole make 6 vols. fol. We notice the following edits. pub. since the ed. edited by Rev. J. R. Pitman, 1822, 6 vols. r. 4to, (see p. 1141, ante.) All of these, as well as Pitman's, contain the whole five commentators,—Arnald, Lowman, Lowth, Patrick, and Whitby,—and all, save Pitman's, have the text of the Scriptures, which the old eds. have not. 1841, 4 vols. 8vo; 1849, 4 vols. imp. 8vo, £3 3*s*.; 1850, 4 vols. imp. 8vo, £4 10*s*.; 1853, 4 vols. imp. 8vo; 1857, 4 vols. imp. 8vo, £3 3*s*. We take some little pride in stating that of the excellent Philadelphia edit. noticed by us on p. 1141, ante, about 6500 copies, or 26,000 vols., have been sold between the date of the first impression, 1844, and that of the last title-page, 1859. We add some opinions to those just referred to:

"The four volumes of Patrick, Lowth, and Arnald are justly valued as containing one of the best commentaries on the Old Testament and Apocrypha which we have in our language."—Horne's Bibl. Bib., 1839, 256.

"Patrick is one of the most sensible and useful commentators on the Old Testament. He had a competent measure of learning, for the undertaking of which he never makes any ostentatious display. . . . Neither Patrick nor Lowth has as much Arminianism as Whitby, though they all belong to the same theological school. Whitby was superior to both in acuteness and research; but, if the reader do not find in them the same talent, he will be exposed to less injury from specious and sophistical reasonings against some important doctrines of Christianity."—Orme's Bibl. Bib.

"A valuable collection, [Patrick, Lowth, Whitby, and Arnald.] Patrick and Lowth are always solid and judicious; and Whitby is learned, argumentative, and thoroughly orthodox."—Preface to Clarke's Bible.

"The best Commentary on the Bible is Bishop Patrick on the earlier Books, Lowth on the Prophets, and Whitby on the New Testament."—Rev. F. Martin.

"Altogether [i.e. the five] they have furnished an exposition of the sacred volume of sterling and permanent value."—Williams's C. P., 1813, 360.

"Learned and useful, [i.e. the five,] but deficient in evangelical sentiment."—Bickersteth's C. S., 1844, 394. See, also, Dibdin's Lib. Comp., 1825, 39, 40.

One of the latest critics upon Patrick's labours is Lord Macaulay, who in his History of England (vol. iii. chap. xiv., 1855) gives specimens of the good prelate's paraphrases of the Psalms of David and the Song of Solomon. It must be allowed that the charge of prolixity is pretty well established by the evidence. See, also, Synd Ahmud's Mohammedan Commentary on the Holy Bible, in Hindustani and English, 1865, &c., 4to. Among the most important of Patrick's works, next to his Commentaries and Paraphrases, already noticed, are: 1. Sermon preached at the Funeral of John Smith, of Cambridge, 1652, '73, 4to. Also pub. with John Smith's Nine Select Discourses, 1660, 4to; 1673, 4to; 1821, 8vo; 1859, 8vo. 2. Aqua Genitatis; a Discourse concerning Baptism, on Acts xvi. 33, 1659, 12mo; 1667. '70, 8vo. Greatly admired in its day. See No. 3. 3. Mens Mystica; or, A Discourse concerning the Lord's Supper, 1660, '67, 4to; 1676, 8vo; 6th ed., with No. 2, in 1 vol. 8vo, 1702. 4. A Brief Exposition of the Ten Commandments and the Lord's Prayer, 1665, '68, '72, 8vo. 5. The Parable of the Pilgrims, 1665, '73, 4to; 6th ed., 1687, 4to; with Introduc. by S. Chamberlain, 1840, 18mo; last ed., 1855, 18mo.

"A book in which, though the parable is poorly imagined and ill sustained, there is a great deal of sound instruction conveyed in a sober, manly, and not unfrequently a felicitous, manner."—Robert Southey. See, also, Charles Lamb's Works, vol. i.

Fifteen Serms. upon Contentment and Resignation to the Will of God; as also Two Serms., &c.; with an Exact Catalogue of his Works, 1719, 8vo. 25. Consolatory Discourses, 1783, 12mo. He also pub. an Examination of Bellarmine's Second Note of the Church, 1688, 4to, and other works against the doctrines of the Church of Rome, &c. Some of these—against the Church of Rome—were repub. in the Controversial Tracts, 3 vols. fol. See, also, Tracts on Popery from Burnet, Wake, Patrick, &c., Oxf., 1839, 8vo. Paley's Clergyman's Companion (see Paley, William, D.D., No. 5) is partly compiled from the devotional manuals of Bishop Patrick. In 1839, Oxford, 18mo, was printed for the first time his (26.) Autobiography; and within the last few months a complete collective edition of his works, which has never before been made, edited by Rev. Alexander Taylor, M.A., has been pub. at the Oxford Univ. Press, 1859, 9 vols. 8vo, £3 14*s*. 6*d*., Autobiography included. See Lon. Gent. Mag., March, 1859, 310. See Biog. Brit.; Burnet's Own Times; Whiston's Memoirs; Birch's Life of Tillotson; Cole's MS. "Of all the ancient writers on the subject of oratory, the most instructive and most useful is Quintilian. I know few books which abound more with good sense, and discover a greater degree of just and accurate taste, than Quintilian's Institutions. Almost all the principles of good criticism are to be found in them. He has digested into excellent order all the ancient ideas concerning rhetoric, and is, at the same time, himself an eloquent writer."—Blair's Lects. on Rhetoric, &c., Lect. XXXIV. 536, ed. Phila., 1854, 8vo.

"Mr. Patsall gives the spirit and energy of Quintilian more than any other translator."—Dr. Clarke.

Paulding, James Kirke, a descendant of Henry Pawling, an early settler of the State of New York, was born on ancestral ground at Pleasant Valley, Dutchess county, August 22, 1778. On attaining his majority he became an inmate of the house of his accomplished brother-in-law, William Irving, of New York; and the literary society into which he was thus thrown tended to cultivate a natural taste for humorous satire, which soon bore fruits in the (1.) Salmagundi essays, referred to on a preceding page. See IRVING, WASHINGTON, p. 935, supra. About ten years after the publication of the last number of this popular periodical, Mr. Paulding, in 1819, published (2.) a second series of Salmagundi; but the success of the plan was not sufficient to authorize the continuation of the work. The numbers pub. form 2 vols. in the (incomplete) collective ed. of Mr. Paulding's works.

"A new Series of Salmagundi, altogether by himself: quite equal to the first; but—such is the miserable caprice of popular opinion—altogether neglected. Only a few numbers—five or six, if we are not mistaken—were published."—JOHN NEAL: American Writers, No. V.: Blackw. Mag., Feb. 1825, 199.

Mr. Neal, in the same article from which the above is extracted, thus speaks of Paulding's papers in the first series of Salmagundi:

"Most are capital; but ill-tempered. No two writers could be more thoroughly opposed in every thing—disposition, habit, style—than were Irving and Paulding. The former was cheerful; pleasant, given to laughing at whatever he saw—not peevishly, satirically, or spitefully, but in real good humour: the latter—even while he laughed—as Byron says of Lara—sneered. Irving would make us love human nature—wish it well—or pity it: Paulding would make us ashamed of it; or angry with it. One looks for what is good in every thing; the other for what is bad."

A later critic, accounting for the failure of the new Salmagundi papers to elicit public attention, remarks,

"The 'town' interest had diminished. More than ten years had elapsed; the writer was then engaged in official duties at Washington; his mind had assumed a graver cast, and the second series of Salmagundi is deficient in that buoyant spirit of vicacity which is one of the distinguishing features of the first."

The reference to the author's "public duties" affords a convenient introduction to a brief sketch of the principal incidents of Mr. Paulding's career. About 1814 he became First Secretary to the Board of Naval Commissioners; resigned this office, after a few years' tenure, for the post of Navy Agent for the port of New York, which station he held for twelve years, (until 1837,) when he was appointed Secretary of the Navy, and remained in office until the expiration of President Van Buren's term. Shortly after his retirement from public life (in 1841) Mr. Paulding removed to his country-seat, situated about eight miles above the town of Poughkeepsie, in Dutchess county: the farm he occupied being part of the manor granted by King William the Third to his ancestor, Eltje Pawling, widow of Henry Pawling. He retained a lively interest in letters, and continued the habit of occasionally committing to paper his speculations on topics which engaged his attention. Of the works in the following list of his publications in book-form, almost all appeared without the name of the author; and he contributed anonymously to various periodicals enough matter to fill several more volumes. 3. The Lay of the Scotch Fiddle; a Poem in Five Cantoes, supposed to be written by W—— S——, [Walter Scott,] Esq. First American from the Fourth Edinburgh Edition, N. York, 1813, 32mo; Lon., 1814, 12mo. Reviewed in Analec. Mag., (by Washington Irving.) Mr. Paulding's burlesque of Rokeby is entitled Jokeby, in Six Cantoes. 5. The United States and England, 1814, pamph. See INGERSOLL, CHARLES JARED. 6. Letters from the South, written during an Excursion in the Summer of 1816, by the Author of John Bull, &c., N. York, 1817, 2 vols. 12mo; 1835, 2 vols. 12mo.

"A well-written book; not very malicious, nor very able; giving some account, but a very imperfect one, of the southern habits and western habits of his countrymen."—JOHN NEAL: Blackw. Mag., xvii. 199.

7. The Backwoodsman; a Poem, Phila., 1818, 12mo. A critic in Blackw. Mag. for June, 1822, referring to Pierpont's Airs of Palestine, remarks,

"This poem, as well as the one which follows it, 'The Backwoodsman,' by J. K. Paulding, is a very respectable (to use the words of the preface) and tasteful effusion of the Pope school. 'The Backwoodsman' is not the best, although its author, we are informed, 'has attained considerable literary celebrity in America.' . . . The relative merits of Homer and Mr. Paulding are thus elegantly and judiciously determined in a couplet of some Columbian bard:

'Homer was well enough; but would he ever Have written, think ye, the Backwoodsman? Never!'"

pp. 686, 687. See, also, xvii. 199.

8. A Sketch of Old England, by a New England Man, in a Series of Letters to his Brother, N. York, 1822, 2 vols. 12mo. In the course of these Letters Mr. Paulding pays a few left-handed compliments to the Lon. Quarterly Review; and that periodical, not to be outdone in civility, devotes no less than twenty-three pages (519–542) of the number for January, 1824, to a review of the Sketch. Timothy Tickler (Letters, No. XVIII., Blackw. Mag., xvi. 293) and John Neal (Blackw. Mag., xvii. 199) unite with the Quarterly Review in censure of Mr. Paulding's work. 9. Koningsmarke, the Long Finne, N. York, 1823, 2 vols. 12mo; 2d ed., entitled Old Times in the New World, 1835, 2 vols. 12mo; Lon., 1843, 2 vols. 12mo. See Blackw. Mag., xvii. 199. 10. Also trans. into Dutch. By far the most successful of all the author's productions, six eds. having been pub. within a year. Mr. Paulding received $1500 for the copyright.

"Very evidently an American work, and well worthy, for its animated and graphic sketches, to be introduced to the British public."—Lon. Lit. Gazette, July 23, 1831, notice of Lon. ed.

Paulding and [his son] William Irving Paulding, Phila., 1847, 8vo. Contents:—I. The Bucktails; or, Americans in England, (the only one of the collection by J. K. Paulding, written shortly after the war of 1812.) II. The Noble Exile. III. Madmen All; or, The Cure of Love. IV. Antipathies; or, The Enthusiasts by the Ears. 24. The Puritan and his Daughter, N. York, 1849, 12mo; new ed., 2 vols. 12mo.

"For the English reader's guidance it is enough to state that one-half of The Puritan's Daughter is carried on in England, and the other in America, and that it does not contain a single combination, character, digression, or speculation which has not been presented to us a dozen times at least by former romancers."—Lon. Athen., 1849, 1206

Many of the works above enumerated were republished by Harper & Brothers, New York, in 1835, in a uniform stereotype edition: this, however, was never completed. Mr. Paulding contributed Childe Roeliff's Pilgrimage, and Selim the Friend of Mankind, to the Tales of the Glauber Spa, (edited by Robert C. Sands;) Odds and Ends, by an Obsolete Author, to the New York Literary World; and, as already stated, many papers (both in prose and verse) to various periodicals. Of these may be mentioned The New York Mirror, The Analectic, The Knickerbocker, Graham's Magazine, Godey's Lady's Book, the Democratic Review, the United States Review, the Literary World, Wheaton's National Advocate, the National Intelligencer, the Southern Press, and the Washington Union. We quote a few opinions on Mr. Paulding's writings:

"In Salmagundi, The Mirror for Travellers, John Bull and Brother Jonathan, and his other writings, Mr. Paulding has given almost every sort of facetious and satirical composition. He deals more largely than Irving in the whimsical and the burlesque, and he is wanting in the exquisite refinement which lends such a charm to Geoffrey Crayon's humour. The follies of men are often confirmed, rather than cured, by undisguised attacks. . . . Mr. Paulding's novels are distinguished for considerable descriptive powers, skill in character-writing, natural humour, and a strong national feeling, which gives a tone to all his works. The Dutchman's Fireside, and Westward Ho! have the fidelity of historical pictures, and they are the best we have of the early settlers of New York and Kentucky."—Griswold's Prose Writers of America, 1852, 29, 35.

"There is no better literary manner than the manner of Mr. Paulding. Certainly no American, and possibly no living writer of England, has more of those numerous peculiarities which go to the formation of a happy style. It is questionable, we think, whether any writer of any country combines as many of these peculiarities with as much of that essential negative virtue, the absence of affectation."—EDGAR A. POE: Literati, 1850, 574.

"His works are exclusively and eminently national, and his descriptions of natural scenery are often singularly beautiful."—Lon. Athen., 1835, 11: Lit. of the Nineteenth Century: America.

"Without any disparagement of such reputation as Mr. Paulding may have gained in his own country, the English have never ranked him among their favourite American novelists. According to our estimation, Cooper, Miss Sedgwick, Ware, and even Bird, come before him; to say nothing of writers who have succeeded in the short story,—as widely differing in colour and intention as Irving and Hawthorne and Willis and Greenwood. We know few authors to whom the epithet 'tiresome' can be more deliberately and justly applied than to Mr. Paulding. He conceives himself to be jocose when he is only dreary; he makes a boast of his subtlety while exhibiting to us the commonest sleight-of-hand tricks of the tale-trader. But we must still remind the reader that such are precisely the qualities on which national tastes and sympathies are apt to disagree. Prophets have different honours and dishonours at home and abroad."—Lon. Athen., 1849, 1206.

"Ecrivain essentiellement Américain, il porte partout dans ses écrits l'empreinte de sa nationalité. Il a l'esprit fin et sarcastique. Sa verve éclate en traits pittoresques; mais il manque de mesure, frappe fort plutôt que juste, et tient peu de compte des règles ou des conventions."—Dict. universel des Contemporains, par G. Vapereau, Paris, 1858, 1348.

Mr. Paulding died at Tarrytown, New York, April 4, 1860. His Literary Life, compiled by his son, W. I. Paulding, was published, April, 1867, cr. 8vo, and his Select Works, in 4 vols. cr. 8vo,—I. The Bulls and the Jonathans; II. Tales of the Good Woman; III. A Book of Vagaries; IV. The Dutchman's Fireside,—1867–68, are also issued by C. Scribner & Co., New York.

Pauli, Dr. Reinhold, a native of Germany, for

2. History of England, [Geschichte von England;] with a Preface by J. M. Lappenberg; vol. iii., Hamburg, 1853. This vol. comprises the period 1154–1272. Vol. iv., Hamburg, 1855; Gotha, 1856. Vol. v., 1858. Vols. i. and ii. were written by J. M. Lappenberg, (pub. at Hamburg, vol. i., 1834; ii., 1837,) who confided the prosecution of his task to Dr. Pauli,—an excellent choice. Dr. Pauli has, with great labour, composed his work from the national archives. For the reign of Edward I. he has 1440 different references to his authorities, while Henry has but 212, Lingard 254, and Hume 295. When will this great work be rendered accessible to the English reader?

"By far the clearest and fullest history of the time which has yet been written."—Westm. Rev., Apl. 1854.

It will be remembered that vol. i. of Dr. Lappenberg's History was pub. in English by Mr. Thorpe, under the title of A History of England under the Anglo-Saxon Kings, with Additions and Corrections by the Author and the Translator, 1845, 2 vols. 8vo. See Lon. Athen., 1845, 557. See THORPE, BENJAMIN, Nos. 10, 16. "On the whole, it has been rarely our lot to review so creditable a reproduction of any poet."—Lon. Athen., 1857, 469, q. v.

"Much as we respect his learning in other respects, he has shown clearly that he does not possess that sufficient knowledge of the English language, as it existed in the time of Gower, which was necessary to qualify him for such a task."—Lon. Gent. Mag., June, 1857, 651, q. v.

As the Confessio Amantis is omitted in almost every collection of the English Poets, the reader must secure Dr. Pauli's edition. See GOWER, JOHN; Brit. Quar. Rev., Jan. 1858. 4. Bilder aus Alt-England, Gotha, 1861; in English, by E. C. Ottè, (Pictures of Old England,) Lon., 1861, cr. 8vo.

We have to add that Dr. Pauli, who was expelled from the Chair of History in the University of Tübingen on account of the expression of his Prussian proclivities, is now (1868) engaged in printing his work entitled Simon de Montfort, Earl of Leicester, the Founder of the House of Commons.

Paxton, Sir Joseph, Knt., M.P., b. of humble parentage, in 1803, at Milton-Bryant, near Woburn, Bedfordshire, became a gardener at Chiswick, the seat of the Duke of Devonshire; was removed by his Grace to Chatsworth, and there effected those architectural and horticultural wonders which have made his name famous in two continents. After rejecting 234 designs, (their own plan included,) the Building Committee of the Great Industrial Exhibition of 1851 accepted the proposition of Mr. Paxton, and at his command the fair proportions of the Crystal Palace arose in all their magnificence and beauty. But in the construction of the new Crystal Palace at Sydenham he had an opportunity, which he used to good purpose, of still further displaying his power of combining elegance and grandeur with convenience and utility. In the organization and home superintendence of the Army Works Corps employed in the Crimean War, 1854, he exhibited ready invention and no small administrative ability. He was M.P. for Coventry from 1854 until his death, June 8, 1865. A statue to his memory is to be erected in the gardens of the Crystal Palace, Sydenham. 1. Payne, John Howard, 1792–1852, a native of the city of New York, at the early age of 13 became editor of the Thespian Mirror, whilst a student at Union College, Schenectady; pub. in 1807 25 Nos. of a periodical called The Pastime; and in his 16th year made his first appearance on the stage, (Park Theatre, New York,) as Young Norval. After a wandering career as an actor and dramatic author, he received the appointment of American Consul at Tunis; and, after a visit to the U. States, during which he was reappointed to Tunis, he returned to die in that city. He was never married. He published in London a periodical called The Opera-Glass; and on a visit to America, in 1832, issued the prospectus of a weekly magazine, at $10 per annum, to be entitled Jam Jehan Nina, (The Goblet wherein you may behold the Universe;) but this project was never carried out. In 1815 he pub. Lisping of the Muse: Selection from Juvenile Poems chiefly written at and before the Age of Sixteen, Lon., 1815, pp. 30. Of his fugitive pieces perhaps the best-known are a series of papers on Our Neglected Poets; and an account of East Hampton, which was published in the Democratic Review. He was the author of the plays of Brutus, or the Fall of Tarquin, (1820,) Virginius, and Charles the Second, (in which Charles Kemble frequently played;) and his name is attached to the following dramatic pieces, (and perhaps others,) all of which, we believe, are translations from the French. 1. The Maid and the Magpie. 2. Accusation. 3. Theresa. 4. The Lancers. 5. Oswall of Athens. 6. Peter Smink. 7. 'Twas I: Adeline. 8. Ali Pacha. 9. Clari; or, The Maid of Milan. But it is as the author of Home, Sweet Home, (words adapted to an old Sicilian melody,) which occurs in Clari, or The Maid of Milan, that Payne has acquired a lasting reputation. The publishers of this song are said (we doubt it) to have cleared by it, for the benefit of Charles Kemble, the manager of the theatre, two thousand guineas within two years after its first publication; and by the year 1832 it was computed that more than 100,000 copies had been sold. See two articles on Payne in New York Mirror, 1832, (by Theodore S. Fay;) Memoirs of John Howard Payne, the American Roscius; Duyckincks' Cyc. of Amer. Lit., ii. 140–145; C. R. Leslie's Autobiog. The United States Government has recently erected a monument over the remains of Payne in the cemetery of St. George at Tunis; and subscriptions for a bust of the author of Sweet Home, by John A. Jackson, of Boston, from an original daguerreotype in possession of C. H. Brainard, were solicited in 1858. From the daguerrotype just referred to, photographic portraits were taken in Boston in 1857.

Peabody, Oliver William Bourne, 1799–1848, a native of Exeter, N. Hampshire, son of Judge Oliver Peabody, D.D., graduated at Harvard College, 1816, completed his legal education at Cambridge, and subsequently practised law at Exeter for eleven years, occasionally serving in the Legislature and editing newspapers, (The Rockingham Gazette and Exeter News-Letter;) in 1830 removed to Boston, where he assisted his brother-in-law, Alexander H. Everett, in the editorship of the North American Review, and acted as assistant editor of the Boston Daily Advertiser; Register of Probate in Suffolk county, 1836–42; Professor of English Literature in Jefferson College, Louisiana, 1842–43; licensed as a preacher by the Boston Unitarian Association, 1845, and from August of that year, until his death, minister of the Unitarian church at Burlington, Vermont. He contributed many articles to the four periodicals with which he was editorially connected; edited The Dramatic Works of Shakspeare, with Life and Notes, Bost., 1844, 7 vols. 8vo; partially prepared a Memoir of his brother, William B. O. Peabody, (completed by Everett Peabody,) to accompany a vol. of the Sermons of the latter, (2d ed., Bost., 1849, 8vo;) contributed to Goodrich's Token, and wrote the Life of Israel Putnam in Sparks's Library of American Biography, First Series, vii. 103–213, (see notices of this Sketch in John Fellows's Veil Removed, N. York, 1843, 8vo;) and the Life of John Sullivan, Major-General in the Army of the Revolution, in same Library, New Series, iii. 1–177. See Discourse at his Funeral, by Rev. Peabody, Stephen, minister at Atkinson, Mass., and previously a chaplain in the army, graduated at Harvard College, 1769, and d. 1819, aged 78. 1. Election Serm., 1797. 2. Serm. at Ordination of J. Webster, 1799. 3. Serm. at Ordination of M. Dow, 1801. The Rev. Dr. Samuel Gilman pub. an account of his residence in his early years with Mr. Peabody, in the Christian Examiner, in 1847, vol. xlii. 313, (Reminiscences of a New England Clergyman at the Close of the Last Century.)

Peabody, William Bourne Oliver, D.D., 1799–1847, twin-brother of Oliver William Bourne Peabody, graduated at Harvard College, 1816; was assistant instructor at Exeter Academy, 1817, and a theological student for the next two years; licensed as a preacher, 1819, and ordained as pastor of the Unitarian church at Springfield, Mass., Oct. 1820. This connection was maintained for the rest of his life. He was the author of the following Lives in Sparks's Library of American Biography: Alexander Wilson, First Series, ii. 1–169; Cotton Mather, First Series, vi. 161–350, (reviewed in N. Amer. Rev., li. 1–231;) David Brainerd, First Series, viii. 257–373; James Oglethorpe, New Series, ii. 201–405. To the North American Review he contributed forty-eight articles, (commencing with Memoirs of Nathaniel Appleton Haven, July, 1828, and concluding with Campbell's Lives of the Chancellors, July, 1847;) pub. single sermons and addresses, and was the author of prose and poetical pieces in the Christian Examiner and other periodicals. In discharge of his duties as one of the Commissioners on the Zoological Survey, he drew up the Report on the Birds of Massachusetts, pub. with D. H. Storer's Report on the Fishes and Reptiles, Bost., 1839, 8vo. (See, also, the Report of the Commissioners, &c., 1838, 8vo.)

"His report fully justified the selection, and, in addition to its scientific accuracy, is intensely interesting for the lifelike description of the habits of the birds, and for the spirit of tender humanity in which they are commended to the protection and even gratitude of the agricultural community. He also prepared for the young people of his parish a series of lectures on birds and plants, illustrated by drawings made and coloured by his own hand."—A. P. Peabody, D.D.: N. Amer. Rev., lxix. 168.

Peacham, Henry, of Leverton, Lincolnshire, b. in the latter part of the seventeenth century, is supposed to have been the author of The Garden of Eloquence, conteyning the Figures of Grammer and Rhetorick, &c., Lon., 1577, 4to; 1593, 4to. It is not absolutely certain whether this book was written by this Henry Peacham or by his son of the same name, (infra.)

Peacham, Henry, of Trinity College, Cambridge, son of the preceding, and a travelling tutor, musician, painter, and author, "was reduced to poverty in his old age, and wrote penny pamphlets for bread." Among the writings of his earlier days are: 1. Sermon upon the Three Last Verses of the First Chapter of Job, Lon. 1590, '91, 16mo. Collier (ut infra, No. 4) thinks this is not by H. Peacham the younger. 2. Graphiæ; or, The Most Ancient and Excellent Art of Drawing and Limning, 1606, '07, '12, 4to. 3. Minerva Britanna; or, A Garden of Heroical Devises, &c., 1612, 4to: Bibl. Anglo-Poet., 522, £8; J. Lilly's Cat., 1869, p. 98, £6 6s.

"The Emblems of Henry Peacham are simple, and are characterized by a poetical turn of expression."—Lon. Retrosp. Rev., ix. 129, q. v. for specimens.

4. Prince Henrie revived, 1615, 4to.

"This is one of the rarest of Peacham's productions; and a copy of it has never been publicly sold."—Collier's Bibl. Acct. of Early Eng. Lit., 1865, voc. Peacham.

5. Thalia's Banquet; furnished with an hundred and odde Dishes of newly-deuised Epigrammes, 1620, sm. 8vo. Lloyd's sale, 916, £28 10s. 6. The Compleat Gentleman, 1622, '27, '34, '61, 4to. The last ed.—1661, 4to—includes the "Third Impression" of The Gentleman's Exercise in the vol., and is the best. Dr. Johnson's definitions of the terms of blazonry were taken from this vol. Peacham's work was the standard authority in etiquette; and when Sir Charles Sedley was indicted before Chief-Justice Sir Robert Hyde for an offence against good manners, that magistrate asked him whether he had ever read the Compleat Gentleman. Quotations from the work will be found in Drake's Shakspeare and his Times. 7. An Aprill Shower, 1624, 4to.

"This, we apprehend, is also one of the scarcest of Peacham's works, as we never saw more than one copy of it."—COLLIER: ut supra, No. 4.

Peacock, or Pecock, Reynold or Reginald, supposed to have been b. in Wales about 1390, was educated at, and Fellow of, Oriel College, Oxford; became Bishop of St. Asaph in 1444, and Bishop of Chichester in 1449. He opposed the dogma of the infallibility of the Church, and in consequence thereof was deprived of his bishopric in 1457 and confined in Thorney Abbey, where he is supposed to have d. about 1460. He was the author of a number of works, all of which remain in MS. save his Treatise of Faith, which was pub. by Rev. Henry Wharton in 1688, 4to. A list of his other works will be found in Rev. John Lewis's life of this learned prelate, which we have already noticed on a previous page, (1091,) and to which we refer the historical and ecclesiastical student. It is, as Lewis remarks, a "sequel to the life of Wycliffe, and it forms a fitting introduction to the history of the English Reformation."

"The language of Bishop Pecock is more obsolete than that of Lydgate or any other of his contemporaries."—Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, ii. 311. n.

We can now add that Peacock's work, written about 1449, entitled The Repressor of Over-much Blaming of the Clergy, r. 8vo, (Rolls pub.,) vols. i. and ii., edited by Churchill Babington, B.D., appeared in 1860.

"His [Mr. Babington's] work has been executed with the most scholar-like precision and conscientious industry."—Lon. Athen., 1860, i. 878.

"With an instructive preface by Mr. Churchill Babington. The work appeals to reason, but is not open to the charge of deism. In tone it may be compared to Locke's 'Reasonableness of Christianity.'"—FARRAR: Crit. Hist. of Free Thought, 1863, Lect. III., n.

Peale, Charles Willson, 1741–1827, a native of Maryland, resident alternately in London and Philadelphia, was distinguished as a painter, as a lecturer on natural history, and as the owner of a remarkable collection of curiosities, long known under the name of "Peale's Museum," of Philadelphia. He was also one of the earliest and most zealous promoters of the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts. This journal, which is now, but we trust will not long be, in MS., records Mr. Peale's artistic experiences for a period of sixty years. He contributed to Cincinnati Literary Gazette, 1824. When a youth, in 1795, Mr. Peale painted an admirable portrait of Washington from the original, the faithfulness of which was generally acknowledged. An account of this portrait, accompanied with a biographical sketch of the artist, will be found in Harper's (New York) Magazine for June, 1857. A very complimentary notice of Mr. Peale's abilities as an artist occurs in Blackwood's Magazine for Aug. 1824, 132, 133. See, also, Tuckerman's Character and Portraits of Washington, 1859, 4to. A biographical sketch was appended to an account of his great picture, The Court of Death, pub. in pamphlet form a number of years since. From this picture, painted in 1829, Dr. G. Q. Colton, of New York, in Dec. 1859, commenced the issue of 100,000 chromo-lithographic engravings, 23×31, at $1 each. Rembrandt Peale d. Oct. 3, 1860. See Tuckerman's Book of the Artists.

Pearce, Zachary, D.D., 1690–1774, a native of London, educated at Westminster School and Trinity College, Cambridge, of which he became Fellow; Rector of Stapleford Abbots, 1719; of St. Bartholomew, London, 1720; Vicar of St. Martin's-in-the-Fields, 1723; Dean of Winchester, 1739; Bishop of Bangor, 1748; trans. to Rochester, with the Deanery of Westminster annexed, 1756. He was the author of thirteen occasional sermons, pub. 1723–60; a Concio ad Synodo, 1741, 4to; two Letters to Dr. Waterland on the Eucharist; a Letter to the Clergy of the Church of England; Epistolæ duæ, &c.; and of the following works: 1. Ad Quintum Fratrem Dialogi III. de Oratore, ex MSS. emendavit, Notisque illustravit Zach. Pearce, Cantab., 1716, 8vo; 1732, 8vo; Londini, 1746, 8vo, (this ed. has some addit. Notes;) Glasg., 1749, 12mo; Lon., 1771, '78, 8vo. A work of great merit. 2. An Account of Trinity College, Cambridge, 1722. 3. De Sublimitate, Gr. et Lat., Notis illustravit et emendavit Zach. Pearce, 1724, 4to; 1732, '52, '62, '73, 8vo. The ed. of 1732 is the best. Pearce's was considered the best ed. of this work until the publication of that of Jonathan Toup. We shall see hereafter that this excellent scholar held Pearce in high estimation. 4. The Miracles of Jesus Vindicated; pub. in four separate Pts., 8vo, 1729. In answer to Woolston's Six Discourses on the Miracles of our Saviour, &c., 1727–29, 8vo.

"Were deservedly much esteemed."—Leland's Deist. Writers, ed. 1837, 88.

Pearce, 1745, '78, 8vo, (the ed. of 1778 is superior to that of 1745;) Oxon., 1811, 12mo. After the bishop's death his chaplain and nephew-in-law, John Derby, (p. 495, ante,) gave to the world the two following collections of his lordship's works: 10. Comment. on the Four Evangelists and the Acts, with other Theolog. Pieces, Lon., 1777, 2 vols. 4to. Prefixed is a life of the bishop, by Mr. Derby. See Waterland, Daniel, D.D., No. 10.

"To Dr. Pearce we are indebted for an invaluable Commentary and Notes on the Four Gospels, &c. The deep learning and judgment displayed in these Notes are really beyond all praise."—Dr. Adam Clarke.

"Contains many useful observations on the style and sentiments of the inspired writers. The notes are generally short, and, though occasionally injudicious, throw considerable light on the text. His theological sentiments are not very marked; but on all important points I suppose they were correct."—Orme's Bibl. Bib.

"Learned and judicious."—Bickersteth's C. S., ed. 1814, 409.

"On the whole, Dr. Pearce deserves to be ranked with other writers of eminence who have employed their philological learning in illustrating the sacred writings."—Horne's Bibl. Bib., 1839, 308.

Also recommended by Bishops Van Mildert and Lloyd.

"Not the less edifying for being delivered without affectation of rhetorical ornament, in a manner becoming the simplicity of the gospel,—the words of truth and soberness."—Editor.

"Judicious and admirable sermons."—Lon. Gent. Mag., 1780, 309, q. v.

"His mode of writing is calm and argumentative, his reasoning clear and obvious to the meanest capacity. His practical inferences and exhortations are serious and important; his explanations of Scripture are, in general, learned and judicious."—Lon. Critical Review.

Bishop Pearce, though so excellent a scholar, was a man of great modesty and humility, and as anxious to avoid preferments, and to resign them when forced upon him, as most men are to gain and to hold them. Nolo episcopari was a verity in his case: and when made a bishop against his will, nothing but the will of the king kept him one. Like many other good men with easy consciences, he was very fond of humour; and specimens of his youthful abilities in this line will be found in the Letter of Ned Mum, in the Guardian, No. 121, and the Spectator, Nos. 572 and 633. See his life, prefixed to his Commentary, &c.; Nichols's Lit. Anec. and Lit. Illust., Indexes; Hallam's Constit. Hist. of Europe, 7th ed., 1854, i. 73, n.; Walpole's Letters, Cunningham's ed., 1861, passim.

"A man of such distinguished ability as Bishop Pearce. I know the bishop, and the bishop knows me. He is one of those few—and few, God knows, they are—that study the Holy Scriptures in earnest, and endeavour to do honour to letters as letters have done to them."—Rev. Jonathan Toup: Letter to Dr. Miles, Dean of Exeter, Aug. 9, 1765: Nichols's Illust. of Lit., viii., 1858, 562

Pearson, J. B., Fellow and Lecturer in Moral Science of St. John's College, Cambridge. A Hand-Book to Mill's Logic; being a Set of Papers with Short Notes and References, in press, Camb., 1869.

Pearson, John, D.D., 1612–1686, a native of Snoring, Norfolk; educated at Eton School and King's College, Cambridge, of which he was chosen Fellow; Preb. of Sarum, 1639; Chaplain to the Lord-Keeper Finch, and presented to the living of Torrington, 1640; Minister of St. Clement's, Eastcheap, London, 1650; Rector of St. Christopher's, London, Preb. of Ely, Archdeacon of Surrey, and Master of Jesus College, Cambridge, all in 1660; Lady Margaret Prof. of Divinity, 1661; Master of Trinity College, Cambridge, 1662; Bishop of Chester, Feb. 9th, 1672–73. As an author the bishop is best known by the following works: 1. An Exposition of the Creed, Lon., 1659, 4to. Originally delivered as Lectures to the congregation of St. Clement's Church. The latest ed. to which the author made any additions or alterations was the 3d, 1669, fol. Trans into Latin,—Expositio Symboli Apostolici, trans. à Sim. Jo. Arnoldo, Francf., 1691, 4to; 12th ed. in English, Lon., 1741, fol. Exposition of the Apostles' Creed, according to Bp. Pearson, &c., by Basil Kennett, D.D., 1705, '21, 8vo. Abridged by Chas. Lambe, 1713, 8vo; by Thos. Bishop, D.D., 1729, 8vo; by Mr. Bradley, 12mo. Abridged for the Use of Young Persons, by Chas. Burney, Jr., D.D., 1810, 12mo. The modern eds. of Pearson's Exposition of the Creed are: I. Oxf., 1816, 2 vols. 8vo; 1820, 2 vols. 8vo; 1823, 8vo. II. With an Appendix, containing for the first time the principal Greek and Latin Creeds; revised by Rev. W. S. Dobson, 1832, '36, '40, '47, 8vo; N. York, 1844, 8vo. III. Revised and corrected by the Rev. E. Burton, D.D., Oxf., 1833, 2 vols. 8vo; 5th ed., 1864, 8vo. In Dr. Burton's ed. the Notes are printed separately in vol. ii. In all other eds. they are placed at the bottom of the page. IV. Carefully revised and collated with the best copies, by James Nichols, Lon., 1844, 8vo; 1854, 8vo; 1861, 8vo; 1865, 8vo; 1868, 8vo. V. Revised and corrected by Rev. Temple Chevallier, B.D., Camb., 1849, 8vo. VI. Edited by E. Walford, Lon., 1867, p. 8vo, (Bohn's Stand. Lib.) There are also An Analysis of, by Wm. H. Mill, D.D., 1843, 8vo; Lon., 1847, 8vo; Conspectus of, by Wm. Bell, 1858, 4to; An Analysis of, by Mr. Stracey, 1848, 8vo; An Analysis of, by Rev. J. Gorle, 1849, 18mo; 4th ed., 1868, 18mo; A Summary of, by J. B. Smith, D.D., in his Manual of the Rudiments of Theology, 5th ed., 1855, 12mo; and Examination Questions on, by C. A. Swainson, 1855, fp. 8vo. See, also, SANDERSON, REV. EDGAR. Pearson's Exposition has a high literary as well as theological value.

"His book on the Creed is among the best that our church has produced."—BISHOP BURNET: Own Times, ed. 1833, iii. 142.

"This is a work of great learning and merit. It contains a system of theology, a good deal of controversy, and a large portion of biblical exposition. On the last account it is entitled to a place in this work, and will repay an attentive perusal."—Orme's Bibl. Bib.

"A very learned and elaborate work."—Williams's C. P., ed. 1843, 302.

"An excellent work, containing a body of divinity."—Bickersteth's C. S., ed. 1844, 464.

"The Exposition of the Creed has nothing superior to it in any language. Metaphysics, logic, classical and theological erudition, are all brought to bear upon that momentous subject, in a manner so happy and so natural that the depth of research and variety of knowledge are most concealed by the felicitous manner of their adaptation. Well might the great Bentley say of this yet greater man that his 'very DUST WAS GOLD.'"—Dibdin's Lib. Comp., ed. 1825, 56. See, also, 58; Blackw. Mag., lxi. 143.

"I would recommend to every man whose faith is yet unsettled, Grotius, Dr. Pearson, and Dr. Clarke."—DR. JOHNSON: Boswell, ch. xv.

"I know no more brief or better summary of the controversy [on the procession of the Holy Ghost] than the common one in Pearson on the Creed."—MILMAN: Hist. of Lat. Chris., vol. viii., b. xiv. ch. ii., n.

"A standard book in English divinity. It expands beyond the literal purport of the Creed itself to most articles of orthodox belief, and is a valuable summary of arguments and authorities on that side. The closeness of Pearson, and his judicious selection of proofs, distinguish him from many, especially the earlier, theologians. Some might surmise that his undeviating adherence to what he calls the Church is hardly consistent with independence of thinking; but, considered as an advocate, he is one of much judgment and skill. Such men as Pearson and Stillingfleet would have been conspicuous at the bar; which we could not quite affirm of Jeremy Taylor."—Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, iii. 298.

"The respect and popularity which this excellent treatise has so long and so widely obtained are owing in a great extent to the strong good sense, and the skill in arrangement of his topics, which its author has exhibited."—Creasy's Memoirs of Eminent Etonians, 1850, 152.

"Bishop Pearson's work on the Creed was first published in 1659; and it is in contemplation to record the completion of its second century by erecting a memorial to the author, whose remains lie, without any record, in the Cathedral of Chester, over which diocese he presided."—(1859.)

2. Vindiciæ Epistolarum S. Ignatii access. Jo. Vossii Epistolæ adv. D. Blondellum, Cant., 1672, 4to: Ant., 1698, 4to. Editio Nova, &c., edidit E. Churton, Lib. of Anglo-Cath. Theol., Oxon., 1852, 2 vols. 8vo. At end of vol. ii. the editor has appended some addits. and corrections to his ed. of Pearson's Minor Theological Works, No. 5, (post.) See, also, Cotelerii SS. Patrum Opera, ii. 236. Both Bentley and Boyle, in their Dissertations on Phalaris, express a high opinion of this work of Pearson's. Dr. Lardner observes that "Ignatius is happily explained by Bishop Pearson;" and another critic pronounces the work "unanswerable." See, also, Gibbon's Decline and Fall, and Schaff's Hist. of the Christian Church, N. York, 1860, 8vo, 469. 3. Opera Posthuma Chronologica, &c., per He. Dodwellum, Lon., 1688, 4to, in Le Clerc's Bibl. Univ., ix. 127.

The first work in the Opera Posthuma is the Annales Paulini, which Bp. Randolph inserted in his Enchiridion Theologicum. An English trans. of the Annales Paulini, with Notes, was pub. by J. M. Williams, Camb., 1825, 12mo; 1826, 12mo; 1828, 12mo.

"Bp. Pearson's Annales Paulini have long been held in high estimation on account of the varied and profound learning of their Author. The English translation is enriched with a great number of annotations selected from the best sources; and among them the translator has largely borrowed from the present work."—Horne's Bibl. Bib., 395.

The second work in the Opera Posthuma is the Lectiones in Acta Apostolorum, which extend from the 1st to the 9th chap. of the Acts,

"and (as may be expected) contain many valuable critical and chronological observations for the elucidation of St. Luke's narrative."—Horne's Bibl. Bib., 315.

In 1853, cr. 8vo, appeared Bishop Pearson's Five Lects. on the Acts of the Apostles and Annals of St. Paul; edited, with Notes, by J. R. Crowfoot. 4. Adversari Hesychiana, Lon., 1844, 2 vols. 8vo. 5. Minor Theological Works, now first Collected, with a Memoir of the Author, Notes, and Index, by Edward Churton, M.A., Canon of York and Rector of Crake, Oxf. Univ. Press, 1844, 2 vols. 8vo. A notice of this collection, which contains some Latin poems by the bishop, will be found in Lon. Gent. Mag., Feb. 1848, 158–160, and a list of its contents in Darling's Cyc. Bibl., Authors, 2320–2322. A trans. of Three Theological Determinations of Bp. Pearson's was pub. by Rev. W. B. Flower, in The Church and the Ministry, Lon., 1852, 8vo. In 1659 the Bishop pub., with a Preface, The Golden Remaines of the Ever-Memorable Mr. John Hales of Eton, 8vo, (see p. 659, supra;) he edited, with a preface of 19 pages, Vetum Testamentum Græcum, ex Vers. LXX., Cant., Field, 1665, 12mo; and he was one of the editors of Critici Sacra. His Annales Cyprianici were printed with Bishop Fell's ed. of Cyprian, 1682, fol. Peckard had the advantage of the materials collected by John Ferrar, brother of Nicholas, and for three years Deputy Governor of the Virginia Company. Much of the History of the Virginia Company is contained in Peckard's Memoirs of Ferrar; and the work should be reprinted in the United States. See the First Records of Anglo-American Colonization: Their History, by John Wingate Thornton, Bost., 1859, p. 7. It is a curious fact, to which Mr. Thornton calls our attention, that among the MS. left, and according to Peckard written, by Ferrar, are a number of Short Histories (so called by Peckard) which appear by the titles to be the same stories which are contained in Fuller's Holy and Profane State. Mr. Thornton remarks,

"Fuller's work was published in 1640; Ferrar died Dec. 1637; yet among Ferrar's MSS. are found the exact 'contents' of Fuller's book! Did Fuller lend his MSS. to Ferrar full eleven years before it was published? It is incredible."

After the above was written, Mr. Thornton found that this coincidence was casually (and carelessly) noticed in Wordsworth's Eccles. Biog. Peel, Rt. Hon. Sir Robert, M.P., D.C.L., Feb. 5, 1788–July 2, 1850, eldest son and third child of the preceding, a native of the vicinity of Bury, Lancashire, was educated at Harrow School and at Christ's Church, Oxford, where he graduated with great distinction in 1808; was returned to the House of Commons as member for Cashel in 1809, and thenceforward, whether in or out of office, exercised a most important influence on public affairs. In addition to the occasional speeches not made in Parliament pub. from time to time by Sir Robert, we refer to the following books and fugitive articles as of great importance to those who would take an intelligent survey of the political history of Great Britain for the first half of the nineteenth century. 1. "For forty years Sir Robert Peel stood in the political arena, always fighting, and most frequently victorious. On the eve of his death he still stood erect, but at peace, in his place in Parliament, shedding the light of his wisdom, without opposition, over the politics of his country, and serenely enjoying his ascendency, which all recognized. He died lamented both by his sovereign and by the people, respected and admired by the adversaries whom he had overcome as well as by the friends who had conquered with him."—M. GUIZOT: Memoirs of Sir Robert Peel.

"I state the fact that a soldier and statesman like Wellington praised above all other things, in a statesman like Peel, his veracity, as a fact deserving to be remembered by all youth of modern free countries."—DR. F. LIEBER: Character of the Gentleman, ed. 1864, 121, n.

"It is much to be regretted that there is no portrait that does him justice; for he had a fine head. Lawrence's half-length is the best; but in that the dress challenges equal attention with the face. The late statues, busts, and pictures of him are miserable things: indeed, his face, like his conduct, has been subject to more misrepresentation than has been the case with most public men."—C. R. LESLIE: Autobiog. Recollec., 1860, ch. ix.

Peele, George, supposed to have been born in Devonshire about 1553, and known to have been dead in or before 1598, after taking his degrees at Broadgates Hall, (now Pembroke College,) Oxford,—B.A. 1577, M.A. 1579,—came to London, and divided the rest of his life between the tavern, the green-room, and the straitened accommodations of the author's study. The Rev. Alexander Dyce pub. editions of his Dramatic Works in 1828, 2 vols. 8vo, (12 copies on l. p.;) 2d ed., 1829, 2 vols. cr. 8vo; again, 1831, 2 vols. p. 8vo; new ed., 1838, (some 1839,) 2 vols. cr. 8vo; and vol. iii. cr. 8vo. Contents vol. i.: Some Account of Peele and his Writings; The Arraignment of Paris; Edward the First; The Old Wives Tale; David and Bethsabe. II. Battle of Alcazar; Devise of the Pageant borne before Wolstone Dixi; Descensus Astreæ; A Farewell to Sir John Norris and Sir Francis Drake, &c., and a Tale of Troy; Polyhymnia; The Honour of the Garter; Miscellaneous Poems; Lines addressed to Thomas Watson; The Praise of Chastity; Coridon and Melampus' Song; Cupid's Arrows; Love; Fragments of the Hunting of Cupid, from Drummond's MSS.; Merrie Conceited Jests; Addenda; Index to the Notes. III. Addenda to the Account of Peele; Sir Clyomon and Sir Clamydes; An Eclogue gratulatory; Speeches to Queen Elizabeth at Theobald's; Anglorum Feriæ; Additional Notes to vols. i. and ii. This ed. has been already noticed: see DYCE, REV. ALEXANDER. The early eds. of the separate pieces of Peele, a number of which have been reprinted from time to time, (see Bohn's Lowndes's Bibl. Man., Pt. 7, 1861, 1815,) have been sold at high prices: The Araynement of Paris, 1584, 4to, (see Retrosp. Rev., iii. 97–126,) produced at the sale of Inglis's Old Plays, 82, £15 4*s.* 6*d.*; Steevens's copy (sale No. 1259) of The Old Wives Tale, 1595, 4to, was sold for £12; and Dibdin, in 1824, estimated its value at "three times that sum," (Lib. Comp., 791;) The Love of King David and Fair Bethsabe, with the Tragedie of Absolon, 1599, 4to, brought £5 15*s.* 6*d.* at the White Knight's sale, (3333;) and the Merrie Conceited Iests of George Peele, &c., wherein is shewed the Course of his Life, 1627, 4to, was sold at the Roxburghe sale, 6685, for £7 7*s.* The rarest ed. of this work, s. a., was reprinted, 1809, 4to. The Battle of Alcazar was sold at Inglis's sale for £5; Thorpe marked it at £6 16*s.* 6*d.*; and in J. Lilly's Bibl. Anglo-Curiosa, 1869, p. 170, it is priced £6 6*s.* In his notice of Peele, Wood does not give a very flattering account of the worldly prosperity of the sons of the Muse:

"This person," he remarks, "was living in his middle age, in the latter end of Q. Elizabeth, but when or where he died I cannot tell; for so it is, and always hath been, that most poets die poor, and consequently obscurely, and a hard matter it is to trace them to their graves."—Athen. Oxon., Bliss's ed., i. 689.

It was certainly not on account of want of praise among his contemporaries that Peale remained poor. Greene tells us that he was "no less deserving than Marlow and Lodge: in some things rarer, in nothing inferior," (Groatesworth of Wit, 1592;) and Nash indulges in a still higher strain of eulogy:

"I dare commend George Peele unto all that know him, as the chief supporter of pleasance now living, the atlas of poetrie, and primum verborem artifex; whose first increase, the Arraignment of Paris, might pleade to your opinions his pregnant dexteritie of wit and manifold dexteritie of invention, wherein, me judice, he goeth a step beyond all that write."—Menaphon, 1589.

But how does Peele stand with modern critics?

"Peele and Marlowe were the contemporaries of Shakspeare: both had exquisite feelings for poetry, and excelled in description, to which the former lent beauty, the latter sublimity."—GIFFORD.

"From the specimens which we possess of his dramatic genius, the opinion of Greene will not readily meet with a modern assent: the pastoral and descriptive parts of his [Peele's] plays are the best, which are often clothed in sweet and flowing verse; but, as dramas, they are nerveless, passionless, and therefore ineffective in point of character."—Drake's Shaksp. and his Times, ii. 240.

"Peele may be classed with Scoggan, Skelton, and Tarleton, as a buffoon and jester. . . . His Merrie Conceited Jests were published in 4to, in 1627."—Ibid., i. 696, n.

"His genius was not boldly original, but he had an elegance of fancy, a gracefulness of expression, and a melody of versification which, in the earlier part of his career, was scarcely approached."—Collier's Hist. of Eng. Dram. Poet., iii. 191. See, also, Collier's Bibl. Acct. of Early Eng. Lit., 1865.

"We may justly cherish the memory of Peele as the oldest genuine dramatic poet of our language. His David and Bathsabe is the earliest fountain of pathos and harmony that can be traced in our dramatic poetry. His fancy is rich, and his feeling tender; and his conceptions of dramatic character have no inconsiderable mixture of solid veracity and ideal beauty. There is no such sweetness of versification and imagery to be found in our blank verse anterior to Shakspeare."—Campbell's Specimens.

"I must concur with Mr. Collier in thinking these compliments excessive. Peele has some command of imagery, but in every other quality it seems to me that he has scarce any claim to honour; and I doubt if there are three lines together in any of his plays that could be mistaken for Shakspeare's. . . . The versification of Peele is much inferior to that of Marlowe, and, though sometimes poetical, he seems rarely dramatic."—Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, ii. 172.

9. Curialia Miscellanea; or, Anecdotes of Old Times, 1818, 8vo. Posth. Pub. by John Nichols. For further particulars respecting Dr. Pegge and his works, see his Life, by his son, in Lon. Gent. Mag., 1796, Pt. 2, 66; Nichols's Lit. Anec., vii., 1813–16, Index, and Lit. Illust., 1858, viii., 1858, Indexes. Mr. H. G. Bohn, London, advertised in 1841 (Guinea Cat., No. 20,044) an attractive vol., containing 28 of Pegge's antiquarian tracts, pub. between 1764 and 1789. This author is not to be confounded with his son,—also an antiquary,—the subject of the next article. See WOOLSEY, THOMAS.

Pegge, Samuel, Jr., 1731–1800, son of the preceding, and of similar literary tastes, was a Barrister-at-Law, a Groom of his Majesty's Privy Chamber, and one of the Esquires of the King's Household. He was a large contributor to the Gentleman's Magazine; was the author of the following works: 1. Curiali; or, An Historical Account of some Branches of the Royal Household, &c. &c., in five Pts. 4to, pub.: Pt. 1, 1782; 2, 1784; 3, 1791; 4 and 5, (pub. by John Nichols,) 1806; (all bound in 2 vols. 4to, £5 5*s.*;) and left in MS., pub. by John Nichols: 2. Anecdotes of the English Language, chiefly regarding the Local Dialect of London and its Environs, 1803, 8vo; 2d ed., with a Supp. to Grose's Glossary, 1814, 8vo; 3d ed., enlarged and corrected, with V. Appendixes, with Notes by Bandinel, Deane, Halliwell, Johnson, Sartin, and Willmot; edited, with Index, by Rev. H. Christmas, 1844, 8vo. See GROSE, FRANCIS, No. 7.

"Alike diverting and informing."—RICHARD GOUGH.
"Highly valuable and instructive."—New Ann. Rev., 1802.
"Written with singular spirit and humour."—Lon. Crit. Rev.
"A singular exception to the dryness of philological inquiries."—Lon. Month. Mag.
"Extremely amusing."—Brit. Critic, 1808.

Also commended by Lon. Month. Rev., July, 1805. Works of this character will now be much consulted, from the determination of the Philological Society of London to prepare a complete Dictionary of the English Language, (1859.) See Pref. to the Anecdotes for a biographical sketch of the author, by John Nichols.

"Prof. Peirce is distinguished in all his writings, from his Elements of Geometry to his Analytic Mechanics, by a peculiarity in his modes of proof. His demonstrations are always concise, and remarkable for the directness with which they attain their end. In the present volume is an instance in which a proposition is established by a few lines of argument as clearly and incontrovertibly as by the dozen pages which the first propounder of the theorem employed in its proof."—Rev. Peirce, James, 1673–1726, a learned and zealous Dissenter, of Arian sentiments, a native of Wapping, London, studied at Utrecht and Leyden, preached at Miles Lane, London, at Cambridge, and, from 1713 to 1718, to a congregation at Exeter,—from which he was dismissed for refusing to sign articles respecting the Trinity; gathered a new congregation at Exeter, and remained the minister thereof until his death. He was the author of Exercitatio Philosophica de Homœomeria Anaxagorea, Utrecht, 1692; Vindiciæ Fratrum Dissentientium in Angliæ adv. Gulielm. Nichols, Lon., 1710, 8vo; in English, 1717, '18, 8vo, (see Nichols, or Nicholls, William, D.D., No. 2;) some occasional Sermons; many controversial tracts in defence of Nonconformity, &c., and of the following volumes: 1. A Paraphrase and Notes on the Epistle of St. Paul to the Colossians; with an Appendix upon Ephesians, 1725, 4to. 2. Do. Philippians, 1725, 4to. 3. Do. Hebrews, 1727, 4to. Nos. 1, 2, and 3, together in 1 vol. 4to, 1727, and again (2d ed.) in 1733, 4to, edited by Joseph Hallett, Jun., who completed the Paraphrase and Notes on the three last chapters of Hebrews, and prefixed an Essay to discover the Author of the Epistle, and the Language in which it was Originally Written. Hallett's 2d ed. of the whole, 1773, 4to. This Commentary, which is on the plan of John Locke and D. George Benson, has been already noticed by us: see Benson, George, D.D., p. 166; Locke, John, p. 1115.

"Peirce," remarks Mr. Orme, "is by far the ablest of the continuators of Locke on the Epistles. Like that great man, he was unfortunately an Arian; but, except on particular passages, his mistaken opinions do not appear. He rather seeks to conceal than to expose his theological creed. . . . Had his views of the character of Christ been correct, he would have left scarcely any thing to be desired on those parts of Scripture on which he wrote."—Bibl. Bib.

"Profound learning and superior critical acumen."—Dr. Bogue.

Peirce's commentary on the Hebrews, with Hallett's continuation and Essay, was trans. into Latin by Michaelis and pub. at Halle in 1747. The translator expresses his warm admiration of the learning and discernment of Peirce. Hallett's Essay was also trans. into Latin by Wolf, and pub. at the end of his Curæ, vol. iv. A learned countryman of our own observes of Peirce's work on the Hebrews, that "Some of the sentiments differ widely from those of Owen, and are such as ought to be examined with great caution; but the work, as a whole, exceeds any English commentary which I have read. The author has a great deal of acuteness, and is by no means wanting in regard to a tact for criticism."—Moses Stuart: Epist. to the Hebrews, vol. i.

"He was a man of the strictest virtue, exemplary piety, and great learning, and was exceedingly communicative of his knowledge. . . . His Sermons are weighty and convincing."—Joseph Hallett.

Pelagius, from whom we have the theological term Pelagianism, is supposed to have been born in Wales during the fourth century, was originally named Morgan, (Celtic Mor, sea. gan, born,—Greek, Πελάγιος,—Latin, Pelagius,) and is said to have been Abbot of Bangor. About 400, accompanied by Cœlestius, an Irish monk, he travelled to Rome, and there excited a violent commotion by opposing the doctrines taught by St. Augustine respecting original sin, irresistible grace, and eternal election. His principal opponents among his contemporaries were Augustine, Jerome, Prosper, and Fulgentius. He was banished from Italy by the emperor Honorius, and is supposed to have returned to his monastery at Bangor, and to have died there, after spreading his doctrines in Great Britain. The best-known of his writings are: 1. Treatise upon the Trinity. 2. A Commentary on St. Paul's Epistles. Annexed to the Commentaries of St. Jerome, and, absurdly enough, long supposed to have been written by the latter. 3. A Book of Eclogues; or, Spiritual Maxims. 4. Letters. Among these is an epistle addressed to a virgin named Demetrias, which is printed in the works of St. Jerome. 5. Pieces in his own defence. 6. Treatise on Free Will. 7. Pelagius's Creed, which he sent to Pope Innocent for his own vindication. Trans. into English, with Notes on the Creed, by W. Wall, Vicar of Shoreham, in his History of Infant Baptism, Lon., 1705, 8vo. The History of Pelagianism, by Jansenius, in his Treatise Augustinus, seu de Doctrina St. Augustini dè Humanæ Naturæ Sanitate, &c., Louvain, 1640, Rotham., 1652, fol., (on which the author was employed above twenty years,) presents a portraiture of Pelagianism as viewed by a zealous enemy; but he who would have "the learning" of the subject must not forget to consult, also, the works of Laet; Gerard Vossius; Le Clerc; the Jesuits Longueval and Patouillet; Dupin; Cave; Mosheim; Milner; Milman; Cardinal Noris; Archbishop Usher, (Antiq. Eccles. Brit.;) and Father Garnici, (Supp. Oper. Theodoreti;) and if the exploration of these volumes leave him still unsatisfied, he will find further materials of study in the writings of many other divines, ancient and modern, Greek Catholic, Roman Catholic, and Protestant.

"The Pelagian doctrine, which was first agitated A.D. 405, was condemned, in the space of ten years, at Rome and Carthage. St. Augustin fought and conquered; but the Greek Church was favourable to his adversaries; and (what is singular enough) the people did not take any part in a dispute they could not understand."—GIBBON: Decline and Fall of the R. Empire, ed. Lon., 1837, 494, n.

Penington, Henry, 1807–1858, a native of Philadelphia, and a member of the Bar of that city, a descendant of Isaac Penington, (post,) d. 1858. See HOLTHOUSE, HENRY JAMES.

Penington, Isaac, 1617?–1679, a son of Sir Isaac Penington, Lord-Mayor of London, 1642–43, was married in 1648 to Mary Springett, widow of Sir William Springett, and mother of Gulielma Maria Springett the wife of William Penn: became a convert to the views of George Fox in 1658, and from that date was a distinguished and zealous advocate—both as a minister and as an author—of the doctrines of the Society of Friends. Excepting when travelling in the discharge of his religious engagements, he resided on his estate, the Grange, at Chalfont, Buckinghamshire. In the course of ten years, from 1661 to 1670, both inclusive, he suffered imprisonment for conscience' sake no less than six times. As this victim to persecution was a man of a remarkably meek and quiet spirit, though courageous in matters of religious principle, it is not unlikely that his republican parentage had some share in stimulating the unsleeping vigilance of the civil authorities. It is highly probable that an additional offence was found in the political tracts of the son, published before the Restoration. He died at Goodnestone-Court, Kent, and was buried at Jordans, in the county of Bucks, where his remains repose by those of William Penn. Of his numerous writings, which amount in number to more than eighty, (principally expositions of his theological dogmas,) a collection was pub. (The Works of the Long-Mournful and Sorely-Distressed Isaac Penington, &c.) in 1681, fol.; 2d ed., 1761, 2 vols. 4to; 3d ed., 1784, 4 vols. 8vo; 4th ed., 4 vols. 8vo. Selections from his Works, New Bedford, 1818, 12mo; Lon., 1837, 12mo. In 1796 appeared Letters of Isaac Penington; to which are added Letters of S. Crisp, William Penn, and others, Lon., 8vo. See, also, Miscellaneous Letters of Isaac Penington, edited by John Barclay, 1823, 12mo; Letters of Isaac Penington, Second Edition, 1829, 12mo; Letters from the ed. of 1796, with additions, Phila., 1842, 8vo. Among his productions are: 1. Light or Darkness, Displaying or Hiding Itself, Lon., 1650, 4to. 2. A Word for the Common Weal, 1650, 4to. 3. The Fundamental Right, Safety, and Liberty of the People, briefly Asserted, 1651, 4to. 4. Divine Essays, 1654, 4to. 5. The Root of Popery Struck at, 1660, 4to. 6. "His writings breathe a spirit of genuine philanthropy, but, being deeply tinctured with mysticism, have been more sought for by such as are fond of that species of writing, than by other readers."—Chalmers's Biog. Dict., xxiv. 285.

For a list of his writings, see the Memoir of Penington referred to on a preceding page, (Bevan, Joseph Gurney, 183;) and for commendatory notices of his character, see the Testimonies of William Penn and Thomas Ellwood, prefixed to Penington's Works. See, also, Besse's Collection, 1753, 2 vols. fol., and The Penns and Peningtons of the Seventeenth Century, by Maria Webb, 1867, cr. 8vo.

It is an interesting series of facts, and worthy of record in this place, that Thomas Ellwood (see p. 555, ante) was domestic Latin tutor to Isaac Penington's children; that it was through the good offices of Penington and Dr. Paget that the amiable tutor obtained the honourable post of reader to John Milton; and that it was to Ellwood's suggestion that the world owes the inception of Paradise Regained, (see p. 1310, supra.)

If you seek to know a man's true character, let those who "summer and winter with him" be your witnesses. Of Isaac Penington's character Thomas Ellwood thus testifies:

"His disposition was courteous and affable; his ordinary discourse cheerful and pleasant: neither morose nor light, but innocently sweet, and tempered with such a serious gravity as rendered his conversation both delightful and profitable."—Ubi supra.

Ellwood tells us that, on his first visit to the immortal Milton,

"He received me courteously, as well for the sake of Dr. Paget, who introduced me, as of Isaac Penington, who recommended me, to both of whom he bore a good respect."—Autobiography: see Ellwood, Thomas, No. 6.

Penington, John, b. in Bucks co., England, 1655, d. at Goodnestone-Court, Kent, 1710, eldest son of the preceding, pub. two tracts (Complaint, 1681; Exceptions, 1695) against W. Rogers's strictures on Isaac Penington's writings; Certificates on behalf of S. Jennings, 1695; and five tracts (1695, '96, '97) in defence of the Quakers, in answer to the publications of George Keith. See Keith, George.

Penington, John, M.D., 1768–1793, a native of Philadelphia, and a descendant of Isaac Penington, (ante,) graduated M.D. at Philadelphia, 1790; studied for two years at London, Edinburgh, and Paris, and commenced the practice of medicine in Philadelphia in 1792. At the breaking out of the yellow fever in 1793 he resolutely "stuck to his post," and soon fell a victim to the foe from whose deadly assault he strove to save his fellow-citizens. He was a contributor to the Columbian Magazine, and in that periodical appeared four of the sixteen Essays which (with an Appendix of 28 pp.) compose the following work, pub. at the early age of 22: 1. Chemical and Economical Essays to illustrate the Connection between Chemistry and the Arts, Phila., 1790, 8vo. He also pub.: 2. Inaugural Dissertation on the Phenomena, Causes, and Effects of Fermentation, 1790, 8vo.

John, No. 4; Lederer, John; Plantagenet, Beauchamp; Moulton, Joseph W. In addition to the critical articles above referred to, Mr. Penington has published: 1. An Examination of Beauchamp Plantagenet's Description of the Province of New Albion, Phila., 1840, 8vo. Reviewed in Lon. Gent. Mag., 1840, ii. 163. 2. Penn, Samuel. Tables of Weight of Steel, Iron, Brass, &c., 5th ed., 1843, ob.

Penn, William, Oct. 14, 1644–July 30, 1718, the only son of Sir William Penn, Knight, Admiral and General of the Fleet during the Interregnum, Admiral and Commissioner of the Admiralty and Navy after the Restoration, was a native of London, and educated at a private academy of that place, after a course of preliminary instruction at Chigwell, in Essex. In 1660 he was entered a gentleman commoner of Christ Church, Oxford, and soon evinced a religious zeal which would have been better appreciated by his superiors had it been displayed according to the orthodox standard of his college. The fervent appeals of Thomas Loe had aroused the consciences of many of the students, and they had endeavoured to strengthen each other's faith by private meetings for prayer and religious exhortation. This innovation, the offence of which was aggravated by a neglect of the worship of the Established Church, was punished by the exaction of the college fine for Nonconformity. At last matters were brought to an open rupture by an attempt on the part of Penn and some others of the youthful nonconformists to tear from the backs of several of the students the surplices which they had lately assumed (a revival of an ancient custom) in obedience to the king's command. These violent reformers were dismissed from college; and those who had no scruple respecting the academical vestment were permitted to wear the offending garment in peace.

William now returned to his father's house; but he soon discovered that he had only changed his scene of discipline: the heads of his college could not be more opposed to the religious observances of the student than was the worldly-minded and punctilious old admiral to what he considered the uncouth manners of a son for whom he had high hopes of courtly favour,—which, indeed, his own patriotic exertions had well deserved of his sovereigns. But if Chimham stood in the way of his own advancement, who could be expected to further his cause? Commands, entreaties, reproaches, and—if the truth must be told—blows, even, were alternately tried in vain, and the youthful confessor was driven from his father's house without a paternal benediction. William's offence was too great for forgiveness,—at least, for immediate forgiveness. Had he consented to drink and carouse, to swear fashionable oaths, and indulge in the other pleasures and licenses usual with the young gentlemen of his condition, there need have been no separation between father and son: irregularities would not have been severely visited, and even profligacy would perhaps have escaped with a mild administration of discipline. But to say "thee," when the best standards of colloquial usage had consented to forget their grammars and pluralize individuals; to refuse to attend the worship of the Established Church, and to persist in uniting in devotional exercises with other obstinate Dissenters from the prevailing communion,—to keep the head covered in presence of rank, and even of royalty itself,—and to have no better justification for these shocking deviations than a supposed conformity with the requisitions of Scripture, and obedience to "the light within," by which that Scripture was supposed to be best interpreted,—who could forgive offences of this aggravated character? But to be serious: how unblamably, how holily, this young martyr walked before God and man,—how worthy of admiration, and of veneration, was the character of William Penn at a period of life when youth is too generally admitted as an excuse for folly, and even for crime,—may be inferred from his noble defiance to a wretched creature of the Government, who, having in vain endeavoured to entrap him into taking an oath, vented his spleen by attacking principles the loftiness of which the magnanimous magistrate found himself entirely unable to comprehend:

"An altercation ensued, in the course of which the justice having insinuated that, in spite of his sanctified exterior, the young preacher was as bad as other folks in his practice, the Quaker forgot, for one moment, the systematic meekness and composure of his sect, and burst out into this triumphant appeal: 'I make this bold challenge to all men, women, and children upon earth, justly to accuse me of having seen me drunk, heard me swear, utter a curse, or speak one obscene word, much less that I ever made it my practice. I speak this to God's glory, who has ever preserved me from the power of these pollutions, and who from a child begot an hatred in me towards them. Thy words shall be thy burthen, and I trample thy slander as dirt under my feet.'"

It would seem to be no great hardship to keep a youth like this in a family: young men, certainly no better, are permitted to remain in the bosom of their families, even in "this enlightened age." But Admiral Penn was accustomed to obedience; and, as the son could not obey father and conscience both, the claims of the latter prevailed, and, as we have already seen, William was ejected from the paternal mansion. It is gratifying to be able to record the fact that, before the stern disciplinarian closed his eyes in death, he was constrained, by the power of truth, to bear testimony to the excellence of that principle in the strength of which the persecuted son might have well said, even at this early age,—had self-exaltation been one of his characteristics,—"I have more understanding than my teachers."

"Son William," exclaimed the dying father, "let nothing in this world tempt you to wrong your conscience! I charge you, do nothing against your conscience! So will you keep peace at home, which will be a feast to you in the day of trouble."

How must these words—unwillingly and painfully, indeed, yet not without consolatory reflections—have recalled to the mind of "Son William" the memory of his earlier days! But we anticipate.

In the same year (1662) the stout young Quaker was sent to travel on the continent; remained for some time in Paris,—where he so far countenanced the use of carnal weapons (a compliance which he subsequently regretted) as to disarm with his sword an antagonist who threatened his life with a similar weapon; studied at Saumur under the famous Moses Amyrault; thence proceeded to Turin; and returned home in 1664, as accomplished a member of the Society of Friends as ever graced the ranks of that estimable communion. He was now admitted as a law-student at Lincoln's Inn; about two years later visited Ireland, where he remained for some time engaged in the management of his father's estates in that country; attended the preaching of Thomas Loe, an eminent Quaker minister (see supra) at Cork, and was greatly exercised by his uncompromising exhibition of religious duty; was carried, with other hearers, from the meeting-house to prison, from which he was released by the good offices of the Earl of Orrery; was recalled home by his father, bitterly reproached for his adherence to his religious principles, again refused to conform to worldly customs, even so far as to uncover to the king, the Duke of York, and Admiral Penn, and was again driven from his father's house; in 1668 first appeared as a minister among the Quakers, and in the same year published his Truth Exalted, and his Sandy Foundation Shaken; was for the publication of the last-named treatise committed to the Tower, and employed a portion of his six or seven months' confinement in composing his principal production,—No Cross, No Crown; in 1669 was reconciled to his father, and resided about a twelvemonth in Ireland, superintending his estates; in 1670–71 was twice committed to Newgate as an offender under the Conventicle Act; in 1670 lost his father, who left him estates worth £1500 a year, and, on his death-bed, interceded for his son, by application to the Duke of York; in 1672 married Gulielma Maria, daughter of Sir William Springett, and daughter-in-law of Isaac Penington, (q. v.,) and took up his abode at Rickmansworth, Hertfordshire, but subsequently settled at Worminghurst, Sussex; in 1677, accompanied by George Fox and Robert Barclay, made a religious tour in Holland and Germany, of which he published an account (Travels in Holland and Germany, anno 1677) in 1694; in 1680 accepted from the Crown, in lieu of £16,000 due to his father, the province of Pennsylvania, which he visited in 1682, and again in 1699, remaining each time about two years; in 1688 and 1690 was four times arrested on suspicion of being a Jesuit and a plotter for the restoration of James II.; in 1696 married his second wife, Hannah, the daughter of Thomas Callowhill, a merchant of Bristol; in 1708, having become involved in pecuniary difficulties, mortgaged Pennsylvania for £6000, and in 1712 agreed to dispose of his rights to the British government for £12,000,—but was prevented from concluding this transaction by three apoplectic fits which impaired his intellect; died at his seat at Ruscombe, in Berkshire, July 30, 1718, mourned as an illustrious exemplar of Christian principle, philanthropic zeal, and unconquerable fortitude in adherence to the dictates of conscientious conviction respecting religious truth. His interest in his transatlantic province descended to his surviving sons by his last wife, and was sold after the American Revolution to the State of Pennsylvania for £130,000. It was in the second year of his residence at Ruscombe (where he remained for the rest of his life) that, as we have seen, his health experienced that shock which for the future incapacitated him for the transaction of business.

But that life-pervading gentleness of disposition and kindness of heart which had so often been exerted to the strengthening of the weak and the comfort of the despondent—extorting even the unwilling admiration of bigoted intolerance and persecuting hate—still lent a charm to the infirmities of age, and even dignified the occasional wanderings of an unsettled mind. The traveller who was permitted to share the genial hospitality of the home of the patriarch, and to gaze upon him who had never bowed the knee to aught save the Majesty of Heaven, must have been more or less than common man not to have been deeply moved in that presence. There would pass in rapid review before his mind the figure of the resolute boy, who, born to high estate, endowed with rare personal beauty, and tempted by all the allurements of a voluptuous and seductive court, voluntarily went forth an exile from his father's halls,—a dependant upon the bread of charity,—rather than disobey the monitions of an awakened conscience; of the voluntary inmate of a felon's cell, who forgot the hardships of imprisonment in endeavouring to persuade all men to seek "that freedom wherewith Christ hath made them free," and to be willing to endure a "Cross" which is but for a moment, for the sake of a "Crown" the glories of which shall know no fading; of a great ruler, whose happy genius had transformed a wilderness into the dwelling-place of peace and plenty, and established a durable empire in the midst of warlike savages, by the sceptre of all-conquering love, by edicts of beneficence and proclamations of good will.

We say "a durable empire:" the suns of almost two centuries have risen and set upon the spot where the pacific lawgiver made his treaty with the red men of the forest; and to us it is permitted in the same place, now a prosperous city, enrolling within its population nearly half a million of the descendants of Penn's countrymen, to offer our humble tribute to his virtues. Of him truly it may be said, "His works praise him in the gates." (Philadelphia, June, 1869.) But we were speaking of the gradual decline which presaged his approach to "the house of all living." There were sometimes affecting evidences, as the good man, surrounded by his children and those who claimed a spiritual relationship with the great apostle of their faith, waited in reverential silence for divine teachings, that he was favoured to "renew his strength," and to draw near to the ineffable Source of life and truth, whom he had long unfeignedly served, in adversity and in prosperity, in weakness and in vigour, in youth and in old age. Of such a solemn gathering we have a record transmitted by Thomas Story, who spent some time in the household in the year 1714.

"That he had a clear sense of truth," remarks the narrator, "was plain, by some very clear sentences he spoke in the life and power of Truth, in an evening meeting we had there, wherein we were greatly comforted, so that I am ready to think this was a sort of sequestration of him from all the concerns of this life which so much oppressed him; not in judgment, but in mercy, that he might not be oppressed thereby to the end."

"While visited by two of his friends in 1716," says another writer, "he still expressed himself sensibly, and, at parting, thus addressed them: 'My love is with you; the Lord preserve you, and remember me in the everlasting covenant.'"

It had been more to the credit of human nature had more of the Proprietary's former "friends" retained their assiduous devotion to the benefactor, when the "time of giving" had passed away. The one who laid out his time and strength for many, found—as who in like circumstances has not found?—that he who outlives his prosperity outlives many "friendships." In the day of his influence in kings' palaces the services of no one seem to have been more in demand:

"William Penn," says Lord Macaulay, "was during the reign of James the Second the most active and powerful solicitor about the Court. I will quote the words of his admirer Croese. 'Quum autem Pennus tanta gratia plurimum apud regem valeret, et per id perplures sibi amicos acquireret, illum omnes, etiam qui modo aliqua notitia erant conjuncti, quoties aliquid a rege postulandum agendumve apud regem esset, adire, ambire, orare, ut eos apud regem adjuvaret.' He was overwhelmed by business of this kind, 'obrutus negotiationibus curationibusque.' His house and the approaches to it were every day blocked up by crowds of persons who came to request his good offices: 'domus ac vestibula quotidie, referta clientium et supplicantium.' From the Fountainhall papers it appears that his influence was felt even in the highlands of Scotland. We learn from himself that at this time he was always toiling for others, that he was a daily suitor at Whitehall, and that, if he had chosen to sell his influence, he could, in little more than three years, have put twenty thousand pounds into his pocket, and obtained a hundred thousand more for the improvement of the colony of which he was proprietor."—Hist. of Eng., new ed., 1858, vol. ii., n.

The reader, if familiar with the subject of which we write, will perceive that the lines above quoted are part of the note in which Lord Macaulay reaffirms the position denied by Mr. William Hepworth Dixon and others, that William Penn, and not George Penne, was the pardon-broker in the composition case of the "Maids of Taunton," (Letter of Sunderland to "Mr. Penne," Feb. 13, 1685–6.) In 1771 were pub. Select Works of William Penn, to which is Prefixed a Journal of his Life, fol., pp. 923; in 1782 his Select Works, with Life, were pub. in 5 vols. 8vo; and again in 1825, 3 vols. 8vo. Among the best-known of his works may be cited, in addition to those already noticed, Some Fruits of Solitude in Reflections and Maxims relating to the Conduct of Human Life, 1718, 12mo; last ed., 1863, fp. 4to; and Fruits of a Father's Love: being the Advice of William Penn to his Children relating to their Religious Conduct, 1726, 12mo. His No Cross, No Crown; a Brief Account of the Rise and Progress of the People called Quakers; and A Pourtraiture of Primitive Quakerism, have passed through many editions and been translated into several foreign tongues.

Sir James Mackintosh, whose name has lately been much in men's mouths in connection with the controversy respecting Penn's alleged complicity in the Taunton brokerage business, thus bears testimony to his character, when referring to the suspicions excited by his zeal in gaining "proselytes to the dispensing power:"

"This admirable person had employed his great abilities in support of civil as well as religious liberty, and had both acted and suffered for them under Charles II. Even if he had not founded the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania as an everlasting memorial of his love of freedom, his actions and writings in England would have been enough to absolve him from the charge of intending to betray the rights of his countrymen."—Review of the Causes of the Revolution of 1688, Works, ed. 1854, ii. 188.

But Lord Macaulay's estimate of Penn's character is far less exalted than that which has been certainly for many years past generally accepted as the true one; and to his comments and his commentators we have already referred the student who would speak or write intelligently upon this theme.

"It should be sufficient for the glory of William Penn that he stands upon record as the most humane, the most moderate, and the most pacific of all rulers."—LORD JEFFREY: Contrib. to Edin. Rev., 1853, 849.

"To William Penn belongs the distinction, destined to brighten as men advance in virtue, of first in human history establishing the Law of Love as a rule of conduct in the intercourse of nations."—CHARLES SUMNER: The True Grandeur of Nations: Orations and Speeches, 1850, i. 114.

Pennant, Thomas, LL.D., 1726–1798, a native of Flintshire, educated at Queen's and Oriel Colleges, Oxford, became an extensive traveller at home and on the continent; and few have turned their observations to better account for themselves and the public. His first publications which appeared in print were an account of an earthquake felt at Downing, April 2, 1750, pub. in Phil. Trans., and a memoir on certain coralloid bodies, also pub. in Phil. Trans., 1755. The last-named article elicited the approbation of Linnæus, and by his recommendation the author was elected member of the Royal Society of Upsal. Thus encouraged in his literary proclivity, Pennant devoted himself to authorship with great zeal, and gave to the world a number of most valuable works in his favourite branches of research. When not travelling, he passed his time at the family seat,—Downing, in Flintshire. 1. Crowle's copy, bequeathed by him to the British Museum, cost him about £7000; another illustrated copy, bound in 6 vols. imp. fol., was sold at Knight's sale in 1847 for £112; and a copy—perhaps the same—in 6 vols. was in the sale catalogue of Mr. Corrie, 1863;) 5th ed., 1813, 8vo. Index, Views, and Illustrations to: see Bohn's Lowndes, Pt. 7, (1861,) 1824. Not altogether accurate, but an interesting and valuable work. See Boswell's Life of Johnson; Nichols's Lit. Illust., viii. 1858, 565. 16. Letter to a M. of P. on Mail Coaches, 1792, 8vo. 17. The Literary Life of the late Thomas Pennant, Esq., written by Himself, 1793, 4to. See infra. Pennant found an authorial death no easy task, (see his Advert.:) he revived, and continued his publications. 18. Hist. of the Parishes of Whiteford and Holywell, 1796, 4to. 19. Outlines of the Globe, 4 vols. 4to: i. and ii., 1798, contain The View of Hindostan; iii. and iv., 1800, edited by his son, David Pennant, contain The View of India extra Gangem, China, Japan, the Malayan Islands, New Holland, and the Spice Islands. 20. A Journey from London to Dover and the Isle of Wight, 1801, 2 vols. r. 4to. 21. A Tour from Downing to Alston Moor, 1801, r. 4to. 22. A Tour from Alston Moor to Harrowgate and Brimham Crags, 1804, 4to. Pennant also printed several brochures at George Allan's Darlington Press, (see p. 52, ante; Rich's Bibl. Amer. Nova, i. 379, 43,) among which were a Catalogue of My Works (two leaves) and a History of the Patagonians, 1788, 4to,—reprinted, with other minor articles, in the Appendix to his Literary Life, 1793, 4to; and he contributed papers on subjects of natural history to Phil. Trans., 1768, '71, '81. Copies of most if not all of his works were taken off on large paper; and for particulars respecting these, and the prices at which his works have been sold, we refer the reader to Bohn's Lowndes, 1822–24; H. G. Bohn's Guinea Cat., Nos. 20,055–20,130. Of Nos. 7, 8, 10, 20, 21, and 22, Stevenson remarks,

"These travels are written in a dry style; but they abound in accurate descriptions of antiquities."—Cat. of Voyages and Travels, No. 490.

But Pennant certainly has not generally the reputation of being a "dry writer:"

"Pennant's style of writing has always appeared to me the most desirable and satisfactory for a tourist author to adopt, as avoiding the dull monotony of a county history, and uniting, under the form of a journal, the pleasing ingredients of history, biography, and topography."—SIR R. C. HOARE.

"Whatever he touched he beautified, either by the elegance of his diction, the historic illustrations he introduced, or the popular charm he gave to things well known before."—SWAINSON.

"Our own Pennant is always lively, full of vivacity and animation, and describes as well a young caterpillar as an old castle."—Blackw. Mag., xxiii. 872.

"Of his literary character the public is the impartial judge; and that public, not only in this but in foreign countries, has fixed on it the stamp of approbation."—DAVID PENNANT, (his son,) in European Mag., June, 1800; reprinted in Nichols's Illust., viii., 1858, 593.

See, also, WHEELDON, JOHN, No. 1.

"Pennant has greater variety of inquiry than almost any man, and has told us more perhaps than one in ten thousand could have done in the time that he took."—DR. JOHNSON: Boswell's Life.

This will perhaps remind the reader of the terrible castigation which Johnson gave Bishop Percy when the latter ventured the criticism,

"Pennant does not describe well: a carrier who goes along the side of Lochlomond would describe it better." See Boswell's Johnson.

And for a most amusing view of Pennant's burning a military officer's wig, see Horace Walpole's Letters.

"He is, indeed, a superficial man, and knows little of history or antiquity; but he has a violent rage for being an author. He set out with Ornithology and a little Natural History, and picks up his knowledge as he rides. I have a still lower idea of Mr. Gough; for Mr. Pennant, at least, is very civil: the other is a hog. . . . Mr. Gough desired to be introduced to me; but, as he has been such a bear to you, [he left a letter from Cole unanswered for nearly a twelvemonth,] he shall not come."—Horace Walpole to Rev. Wm. Cole, May 28, 1774: Walpole's Letters, ed. 1861, vi. 86.

The reader will find voluminous accounts of our author and his works in his Literary Life by himself, 1793, 4to; the prefaces to the Hist. of the Parishes of Whiteford, &c., 1796, 4to, and (by his son) to the Outlines of the Globe, 1800, 4to; the memoir by David Pennant, in European Mag., June, 1800; Nichols's Lit. Anec. and Lit. Illust.; Biog. Univ., by Cuvier; Chalmers's Biog. Dict., xxiv. 299–306; and Boswell's Life of Johnson. Cuvier (in Biog. Univ.) commends our author and his writings in high terms. It will be remembered that it was to Pennant that Charles Cordiner addressed his Letters on the Antiquities and Scenery of the North of Scotland, 1780, 4to; and that it was to Pennant and Daines Barrington that Gilbert White wrote those charming descriptions which have acquired an enduring reputation under the title of The Natural History and Antiquities of Selborne. Pennant assisted John Lightfoot in his Flora Scotica, and praised his work when it appeared, (see p. 1099, ante;) nor let us omit to notice in this connection that Foster named a genus of plants in honour of our author,—Pennantia.

Pepperell, Lieut.-General Sir William, 1696–1759, a native of Kittery Point, Maine, commanded the New England expedition against Louisbourg in 1745. His only publication was Conference between Sir William Pepperell and other Commissioners, and the Indians of the Penobscot Tribe, Bost., 1753, 8vo. The following work professes to have been compiled from MSS. "sent over by General Pepperell:" to what extent original, we know not. Pepys, Samuel, 1632–1703, Secretary to the Admiralty in the reigns of Charles II. and James II., the son of a London tailor, and educated at Magdalene College, Cambridge, (to which he bequeathed The Pepysian Library,) retired from his official duties, which he had most ably sustained, on the accession of William and Mary, and found ample amusement in literary, scientific, and artistic employments. He was a musician, a connoisseur in painting, architecture, and early English poetry, (see his collection of English Ballads; Percy, Thomas, D.D.,) and of such repute for his interest in scientific investigations that he held the office of President of the Royal Society from 1684 to 1686. 1. But by far the most valuable work with which this name is connected reposed for more than 150 years unread in the Pepysian Library, when Mr. John Smith (subsequently Rector of Baldock, Herts) succeeded in deciphering the stenographic characters which had concealed much amusement and instruction from the world, and in 1825 appeared Memoirs of Samuel Pepys, Esq., edited by Richard, Lord Braybrooke, 2 vols. r. 4to, £6 6*s.*: 12 copies thick paper, r. 4to, for presents: 3 copies in folio. Of this work, (re-issued 1828, 2 vols. r. 4to, £5 5*s.*,) which contains Pepys's Diary from 1659 to 1669, and a Selection from his Private Correspondence, the 2d ed. was pub. 1828, 5 vols. 8vo, £3 10*s.* These edits. are now almost worthless; for the editor, having purposely omitted many of the most interesting portions of the MS., in 1848–49 pub. a third and revised ed, (under the title of Diary and Correspondence of Samuel Pepys, &c., with Numerous Passages now restored from the Original MS., and many additional Notes,) 5 vols. p. 8vo, £2 12*s.* 6*d.*; re-issued 1850–51, 5 vols. p. 8vo, £1 10*s.*; 4th ed., 1853, 4 vols. p. 8vo; 5th ed., 1854, 4 vols. cr. 8vo; 6th ed., 1858, 4 vols. p. 8vo, £1, (Bohn's Hist. Lib.;) 1st Amer. from the 5th Lon. ed., Phila., 1855, 4 vols. 8vo, $5. To Bohn's ed. of Pepys's Diary and Correspondence the reader must add the same publisher's (Hist. Lib.) ed. of Evelyn's Diary and Correspondence, new ed., corrected, revised, and enlarged by John Forster, Esq., (see p. 616, ante,) 1858–59, 4 vols. p. 8vo, £1; new ed., 1863, 4 vols. 8vo. A more complete edition of the Diary is promised, (1868.) Candour compels us to state that Lord Braybrooke (d. 1858: see Lon. Gent. Mag., 1858, i. 639, and 1861, ii. 201) did not discharge his editorial duties in the most satisfactory manner. Lord Jeffrey, indeed, (Edin. Rev., xliii. 54,) commends his lordship's performance; but Sir Walter Scott (Lon. Quar. Rev., xxxiii. 264) records a less favourable verdict. Many of his errors were pointed out in a series of papers in the London Athenæum, (review of the 3d ed., 1848–49,) 1848, 549, 576, 669, 699, 902, 1293, 1322; 1849, 807. These must be read by the student; nor must he overlook the reviews of the 1st ed., by Sir Walter Scott, in Lon. Quar. Rev., March, 1826, 281–314, (see Lockhart's Life of Scott, chap. lxvii.;) by Lord Jeffrey, in Edin. Rev., Nov. 1825, 23–54, and in his Contrib. to Edin. Rev., 1853, 224–242; Westm. We have already on a preceding page (Evelyn, John, 567) commended Pepys's volumes to our readers, and quoted a highly eulogistic line from Sir Walter Scott's review of them, (supra.) We give the sentence from which that line is extracted:

"If, quitting the broad path of history, we seek for minute information concerning ancient manners and customs, the progress of arts and sciences, and the various branches of antiquity, we have never seen so rich a mine as the volumes before us. The variety of Pepys's tastes and pursuits led him into almost every department of life."—Lon. Quar. Rev., xxxiii. 308.

"Of very great interest and curiosity. . . . The author seems to have been possessed of the most extraordinary activity, and the most indiscriminating, insatiable, and miscellaneous curiosity that ever prompted the researches or supplied the pen of a daily chronicler."—Lord Jeffrey: Edin. Rev., xliii. 26.

"The best book of its kind in the English language. . . . Pepys is marvellously entertaining: the times and the man peep out in a thousand odd circumstances and amusing expressions. . . . The ablest picture of the age in which the writer lived, and a work of standard importance in English Literature."—Lon. Athen., 1848, 669.

The reader must add to this valuable work The Life, Journals, and Correspondence of Samuel Pepys, Esq., F.R.S., &c., including a Narrative of his Voyage to Tangier, deciphered from the Short-hand MSS. in the Bodleian Library, by the Rev. John Smith, A.M., Decipherer of "Pepys's Memoirs," now first published from the Original, 1840, 2 vols. 8vo; some title-pages carry 1841. See a review of these vols., edited by John Towil Rutt, in Edin. Rev., Oct. 1841, 105–127, (by Leigh Hunt; repub. in his Men, Women, and Books, vol. ii. chap. xi.,) and one in Lon. Athen., 1840, 979, 1008.

"Bourrienne is admirable,—the French Pepys."

Whilst borrowing from the French libraries, the reader should not forget a work which may be profitably read with Pepys's volumes,—the Mémoires du Cardinal de Retz, 1817, 6 vols.

"The best Memoirs I know of are those of Cardinal de Retz: I hardly know a book so necessary for a young man to read and remember."—Lord Chesterfield.

"These Memoirs are written with an air of greatness, an impetuosity of genius, and an inequality which are the image of his conduct. . . . He spares neither himself nor others."—Voltaire.

Perceval, John, M.P., 1711–1770, second Earl of Egmont, and son of the preceding, held several public offices, and was the author of six political tracts, of which the best-known, Faction Detected by the Evidence of Facts, 1743, 8vo, 7th ed., 1744, 8vo, was long ascribed to Lord Bath. Percival, James Gates, M.D., 1795–1856, a native of Berlin, Connecticut, and a son of James Percival, M.D., of that place, graduated at Yale College, 1815; subsequently studied medicine, and received his degree in 1820, but soon relinquished the practice of his profession; in 1821 pub. a vol. (Poems, New Haven, 12mo, pp. 346) containing the first part of Prometheus (a poem in the Spenserian stanza) and a few minor poetical pieces; in 1822 he pub. an Oration delivered before the Phi Beta Kappa Society of Yale College, and the second part of Prometheus, and in the same year issued at Charleston, South Carolina, the first number of Clio,—a pamphlet of about a hundred pages, consisting principally of verse; soon afterwards issued the second part, entirely of verse, which was succeeded (at New Haven) in the same year (1822) by the first and second parts of Clio, a miscellany of prose and verse; in 1823 pub. at New York a collection of his Poems, 8vo; repub., Lon., 1824, 2 vols. cr. 8vo; in 1824 received the appointment of Assistant Surgeon in the United States Army, and was detailed to West Point as Professor of Chemistry in the Military Academy at that place; resigned his post within a few months, and was appointed a surgeon in connection with the recruiting-service at Boston, in which city he contributed to the United States Literary Gazette, and edited several works for the press, among which were a republication of Knox's Extracts and Epistles, (see Knox, Vicesimus, D.D., No. 5;) in 1826, Boston, 8vo, pub. his Poem (The Mind) delivered before the Alpha of the Connecticut Phi Beta Kappa Society, Sept. 13, 1825; in 1827 removed to New Haven, (which continued to be his permanent residence until his death,) and in the same year pub. the third part of Clio, a Poem, New York, 8vo, and commenced a revision, by a comparison with the original French, of the English version —adding Notes of his own—of Malte-Brun's Geography, completed in 1832, and pub. in 1834, Boston, 3 vols. 4to; again, 1844–45, 3 vols. 4to; in 1827–28 assisted in the preparation of the first half, more especially of the scientific words, of the first quarto edition, pub. in 1828, in 2 vols., of Noah Webster's Dictionary of the English Language; (at a later period he revised the scientific articles in A, B, and a portion of C, in Dr. Goodrich's new ed., 1847, 4to, of this important work;) in 1835 was appointed, in conjunction with Prof. Charles U. Shepard, to make a mineralogical and geological survey of the State of Connecticut, and in 1842 pub. his Report on the Geology of the State of Connecticut, New Haven, 8vo, pp. 495; from 1841 to 1844 contributed a number of metrical versions of German, Sclavonic, and other lyrics, accompanied with critical and explanatory essays, to the New Haven papers, and in 1843 pub., in the same city, The Dream of a Day, and other Poems, 12mo; in 1853 was engaged by the American Mining Company to survey their lead-mining region in Wisconsin; in 1854 was appointed, by Governor Barstow, State Geologist, and continued in active discharge of his official duties until a short time before his death at Hazle Green, Wisconsin. His first Report was pub. in 1855, (Madison, 8vo, pp. 101,) and the second was left nearly ready for the press. Dr. Percival was never married; nor would his eccentric mode of life have comported with ordinary domestic duties. For society he had as little inclination: he probably had but little hope of increasing his knowledge by miscellaneous intercourse; and he had no desire to display the acquisitions already made. He was never so happy as when, with a book in his library, or the geologist's hammer in his hand, he sought to add to his large stores of information respecting man and his dwelling-place.

A complete collection, then first brought together, of his Poetical Works, with a Biographical Sketch, (by L. W. Fitch, from the MSS. of the late Erasmus D. North, M.D., and other sources,) was pub., Boston, 1859, 2 vols. 18mo, pp. lxii. and 402, 517.

"It is pleasant to see the Poems of Percival in a collected shape, printed, bound, and published in a style worthy of their merit and his memory. . . . The 'New England,' 'Coral Grove,' 'Seneca Lake,' and other popular lyrics of Percival have endeared his muse to more than one generation; but the cultivated and sympathetic reader, upon examining these two 'blue and gold' volumes just published by Ticknor & Fields, will find a love of nature as scientific as it is ideal, an invention in metrical skill as rare as it is attractive, a tenderness and reflection, a classical discipline and an American tone, a copious, versatile, eloquent fancy, language, and sentiment, which will gain a critical rank for Percival which, to those unfamiliar with his collected writings, will prove an agreeable surprise. The memoir and portrait add to the value and interest of the volumes." —H. T. Tuckerman.

The vols. were reviewed in N. Amer. Rev., July, 1860, 72, by Rev. J. H. Ward.

We are pleased to observe by a note in vol. i. that "It is proposed at some future time to publish a volume of Percival's translations uniform with this edition of his Poems."

Percival translated from many tongues:

"He reads with fluency," wrote one in his lifetime, "ten languages, and is so familiar with the Latin, Greek, French, Spanish, German, and Italian, that he can take a work never before seen by him, in any of those languages, and read it with as much correctness and ease as he would one of his own poems."

This is, of course, absurdly exaggerated: nothing short of inspiration can transmute in this fashion. But much less than this would be high praise; and Percival's linguistic attainments were certainly not of an every-day character. To a knowledge of the Greek, Latin, Sanskrit, French, Italian, Spanish, and Basque, he added a large acquaintance with the poetry of the Sclavonic tongues, and that of the Gaelic, Welsh, Norse, Danish, and Swedish. Of the "concord of sweet sounds" he was an enthusiastic admirer, and the genius of language was by his paternal agency constituted one of "the daughters of Music," by an adoption at once pleasing and remarkable.

"It was one of his favourite plans," we are told by his biographer, "to imitate in English all known metres in all accessible languages from the Sanskrit downwards. He told me that he had versified in thirteen languages; and I have heard from others that he had imitated all the Greek and German metres."—Percival: Atlantic Monthly, July, 1859, 59–73.

After the publication of the article from which we have just quoted, its accomplished author, Prof. C. U. Shepard, (ante,) thus wrote us:

"I have lately heard one other circumstance connected with Percival's self-culture, which may interest you. He was at the pains to write out a translation [his own] of Homer, solely with a view to the improvement of his style."—To S. Austin Allibone: New Haven, July 2, 1859.

Of the devotion with which he ministered at the altar of Euterpe we have a graphic account by Mr. Richard S. Willis, of the Musical World, quoted in the Biographical Sketch prefixed to Percival's Poetical Works, ed. 1859. But neither Philology, Poetry, nor Music—each a proverbially jealous mistress—was permitted to debar the student from extensive excursions into departments of research apparently the least connected with those just recited, and with each other. Like the great lord chancellor and greater philosopher, Percival had at an early age "taken all knowledge for his province." Before he had attained his twenty-eighth year, a well-known critic testifies of him,

"We observe in every part of these volumes proofs of very extensive and profound general knowledge. There is almost an encyclopædian familiarity with subjects in many departments of modern science. . . . We regard his powers and resources as inexhaustible."—Rev. Samuel Gilman, D.D.: review of Clio, Numbers 1 and 2, N. Amer. Rev., Jan. 1823, 102–123.

The treasures of various learning, thus early acquired, received constant accessions through life, and presented at its close an aggregate of wealth to which the glowing eulogy of one of the best of American living scholars has done no more than justice. (See George Ticknor's letter, 1858, in Biog. Sketch in Percival's Poetical Works, ed. 1859, xliv.)

Notwithstanding the frequent terrors of the res angusta domi, he managed, by a diligent use of opportunities, to accumulate a remarkable collection of books,—more than 10,000 in number. These were offered, en masse, by his executor, for $20,000, but finally were removed from their curious-looking receptacle on Park Place, below George Street, New Haven, and sold by Messrs. Leonard & Co., at Boston, in April, 1860.

To consider him as a poet: exactly one year before Dr. Gilman penned the lines which we have just cited, Edward Everett reviewed Percival's first volume of Poems, (1821, 12mo, p. 346,) in the North American Review, and, whilst qualifying frankly expressed admonition with critical counsel, still awards to the author the high praise of presenting the public with a volume which "contains the marks of an inspiration more lofty and genuine than any similar collection of fugitive pieces which has come to our notice from a native bard."—Jan. 1822, 1–15.

The London Monthly Review, whilst strongly condemning what we suppose neither Percival nor any of his judicious friends would have felt easy to justify,—"the startling and terrific pictures of a powerful but fevered imagination, of contempt and hatred of mankind, &c., which disfigure some of the pages of his first collection,"—characterizes Prometheus as "abounding in splendid and fanciful passages," and, after citing long extracts as evidence of this assertion, remarks,

"If the muse of the New World continues to rank among her votaries poets who can produce lines equal and superior to the preceding, she will not long have to repine at the fame of those of older nations."—July, 1824, 315–321.

Early in the next year, John Neal, who at that time was wont, through the columns of transatlantic periodicals, to astonish "American Writers" with the intimate knowledge of their literary life displayed (as they thought) by English critics, and who, we are glad to say, still lives to laugh at our quotations from the lucubrations of his adolescentia, thus discourses of Percival:

"Among poets, very much what Geoffrey Crayon is among prose writers; calm, gentle, steady, and beautiful; an imitator of Byron,—so successfully, too, in his Prometheus that stanza after stanza would pass for Byron's if they appeared in a collection of his poetry. The best of Dr. P.'s workmanship, however, is to be found in his little pieces, many of which are very beautiful, pure, sweet poetry without being wonderful or great." —American Writers, No. V.: Blackw. Mag., Feb. 1825, 199.

See, also, Paine, Robert Treat, (supra.) In another review of the writers of America, also published in London, the critic does not hesitate to declare that "The first poet of America, by the rule of Horace, poeta nascitur non fit, is James G. Percival. He was born one. He would have been a poet under any circumstances,—born anywhere, bred in any manner. He has not written any one thing equal to the 'Evening Wind' of Bryant, but his birthright lies a thousand leagues higher up Parnassus. . . . Percival is the most interesting man in America. Had he been born in any country of Europe, he would have had fame and fortune thrust upon him, which he wants the confidence to pluck down upon himself."—Literature of the Nineteenth Century,—America: Lon. Athen., 1835, 54, 55.

Percival's and Bryant's names will also be found in conjunction, though not in the way of contrast, in the Edinburgh Review for April, 1835, 34; Selections from the American Poets, Dublin, 1834, 8vo. Dr. Gilman had said, long before, that "the admirers of Mr. Bryant might find cause of jealousy" in Percival's Self-Devotion to Solitary Studies Accounted For, and the Prevalence of Poetry; and remarked—referring to Percival's poetry published before 1823—that "The pieces are not a few, in which the soul of the author, rising as he proceeds, involves itself and the reader in a cloud of delicious enchantment. He possesses the rare and divine art of imparting to language those mysterious and unearthly influences which come to us from the strings of an Æolian harp."—N. Amer. Rev., Jan. 1823: review of Clio, Numbers 1 and 2.

See, also, Gilman's Contributions to Literature, 1856. Much to the same effect is the verdict of a very eminent American critic:

"The glow and sparkle of Percival's verse are often in the highest degree inspiring. The swell and sweep in his diction correspond with the turbulence and joy of soul from which much of his poetry seems to gush. The mind of the reader is hurried along the stream of his verse, and readily adopts his changing moods. 'The Prevalence of Poetry,' 'Consumption,' 'Clouds,' 'Morning among the Hills,' 'Genius Slumbering,' 'Genius Waking,' 'The Sun,' and 'New England,' are all excellent, and evince his artistical ability and the range of his genius. We say artistical ability, because most of Percival's poems indicate greater capacity in the writer than is directly expressed."—Edwin P. Whipple: N. Amer. Rev., Jan. 1844, 19, (review of Griswold's Poets and Poetry of America;) and in his Essays and Reviews, 1851, i. 53, 54.

Percival admits that his verse is "very far from bearing the marks of the file and the burnisher, and tells us that he likes to see poetry in the full ebullition of feeling and fancy foaming up with the spirit of life, and glowing with the rainbows of a glad inspiration."

"If by this," remarks Dr. Griswold, "he means that a poet should reject the slow and laborious process by which a polished excellence is attained, very few who have acquired good reputations will agree with him."—Poets and Poetry of America, 16th ed., 1855, 220.

"His poems," observes another American critic, "are musical, inventive, marked by a brilliant and creative fancy, and a copious command of expressive language; but, in general, they lack the warmth and interest which come from the passions and affections of the human heart."—GEORGE S. HILLARD: F. C. Reader, 1856, 51.

Percy, Thomas, D.D., 1728–1811, a native of Bridgenorth, Shropshire, where his father was a grocer, was educated at Christ Church, Oxford; became Vicar of Easton Mauduit, Northamptonshire, (which he held with the rectory of Wilby, in the same county,) 1756; Domestic Chaplain to the Duke of Northumberland about 1766; Chaplain to the King, 1769; Dean of Carlisle, 1778; Bishop of Dromore, Ireland, 1782. He died at the palace of Dromore, on the 30th of September, after a life greatly distinguished by an active zeal for the promotion of sound learning, elegant literature, and the advancement of the temporal and spiritual interests of the subjects of his charge.

Some doubt has been expressed (in Knight's Eng. Cyc., Biog., iv. 1857, 738; Notes and Queries, 1868, ii. 169, 205, &c.) of his being "of the noble house of Percy:" his descent can be seen in Nash's History of Worcestershire, ii. 318, deduced from the Earls of Northumberland; and he certainly esteemed himself the "heir male of the ancient Percies." 1. An ed. was pub. in Phila., 1823, 3 vols. 12mo; and another, edited and pub. by F. Bell, Phila., (see ELTON, CHARLES ABRAHAM, ante,) with A Supplement of Many Curious Historical and Narrative Ballads reprinted from Rare Copies, with a Copious Glossary and Notes, 1855, 8vo, pp. 558. There has recently been issued an edit. which it is asserted is "the best and handsomest ever published:" Edin., 1857, 3 vols. 8vo, with a Memoir of the Author, and Critical Dissertations, by Rev. George Gilfillan. See, also, RIMBAULT, EDWARD F., LL.D., No. 8; TRIPP, REV. HENRY. New ed. of Percy's Reliques, N. York, Leypoldt & Holt, 1867, 3 vols. sq. 16mo.

Percy's work—a large portion of which was taken from the collection of Samuel Pepys, (q. v.)—was attacked with some justice, but inexcusable coarseness, by Joseph Ritson in his Observations on the Ancient English Minstrels, xix., &c., prefixed to his Ancient Songs from the Time of King Henry III. to the Revolution, 8vo, 1790; 2d ed., 1792: see Dr. Thomas Percy's (nephew of the bishop) Advert. to 4th ed. of The Reliques, 1794; Nichols's Lit. Illust., viii. 144, 145, 245, 372, 373, 376; Scott's Introduc. Remarks on Popular English Poetry, prefixed to his Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border; Southey's Life and Corresp., chap. ix.; Blackw. Mag., l. 418. It was long supposed that Johnson also ridiculed Percy's labours; but Mr. Croker has shown that for Thomas Percy should be read Thomas Warton: see Boswell's Johnson, ed. 1848, r. 8vo, 547, n. To quote the many commendations which have been lavished on Percy's Reliques, to cite illustrations of the influence which they have exerted on the poets of Great Britain from Sir Walter Scott to Tennyson, we lack both time and space: yet the subject demands at least a few lines, and they must not be denied. In his Memoir of his Early Life, Scott tells us of his delight in the perusal and acquisition of Percy's collection:

"But above all," says he, "I then first became acquainted with Bishop Percy's Reliques of Ancient Poetry. . . . The first time I could scrape a few shillings together,—which were not common occurrences with me.—I bought unto myself a copy of these beloved volumes; nor do I believe I ever read a book half so frequently, or with half the enthusiasm."—Lockhart's Life of Scott, chap. i. See, also, chap. l.

In his Introductory Remarks on Popular English Poetry, prefixed to his Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border, he thus records the verdict of his maturer years:

"The taste with which the materials were chosen, the extreme felicity with which they were illustrated, the display at once of antiquarian knowledge and classical reading which the collection indicated, render it difficult to imitate and impossible to excel a work which must always be held among the first of its class in point of merit, though not actually the foremost in point of time. . . . On the whole, we may dismiss the 'Reliques of Ancient Poetry' with the praise and censure conferred on it by a gentleman, himself a valuable labourer in the vineyard of antiquities: 'It is the most elegant compilation of the early poetry that has ever appeared in any age or country. But it must be frankly added that so numerous are the alterations and corrections, that the severe antiquary, who desires to see the old English ballads in a genuine state, must consult a more accurate edition than this celebrated work.' (Introduction to Evan's Ballads, 1810.)"

His lordship also printed Specimens of all the Known Writers of English Blank Verse before Milton, of which the whole impression, save four copies, was destroyed by fire; edited The Matron's Six Short Histories, 1762, sm. 8vo; and contributed to a number of literary undertakings. For an account of these labours, and notices of this learned and excellent prelate, see Nichols's Lit. Anec., vii., and his Lit. Dr. Johnson, we have seen, (see PENNANT, THOMAS,) quarrelled with Percy; but it was a fortunate pass at arms for the latter, inasmuch as Johnson's repentance signalized itself in the glowing eulogy on his late foe recorded in Boswell's lxiii. chapter:

"A man out of whose company I never go without having learned something. I am sure that he vexes me sometimes, but I am afraid it is by making me feel my own ignorance. So much extension of mind, and so much minute accuracy of inquiry, if you survey your whole circle of acquaintance, you will find so scarce, if you find at all, that you will value Percy by comparison. . . . Percy's attention to poetry has given grace and splendour to his studies of antiquity."—Letter to Boswell, April 23, 1778.

But a nobler tribute was paid to the bishop's memory by the establishment in 1840 of The Percy Society for the Publication of Ballad Poetry, or works illustrative of that department of Literature: President, the Right Hon. Lord Braybrooke, F.S.A., (died 1858;) Secretary, Thomas Wright, M.A., F.S.A., &c. This Society (we regret to add) was dissolved in 1852, after printing 96 vols., for a list of which see Bohn's Lowndes. Appendix, 1864, 59–65. For notices of Percy Society publications, see Lon. Percy, Thomas, D.C.L., Fellow of St. John's College, Oxford, 1768–1808, Vicar of Thurrock Greys, 1793, a nephew of the preceding, and the editor of the 4th ed. of his Reliques, 1794, 3 vols. cr. 8vo, excited the wonder of Daines Barrington by an epic poem of more than 600 lines written in his ninth year. A few of his short poems are in the Poetical Register. See Nichols's Lit. Anec., viii. 147, 148, and his Lit. Illust., vii. 54, 192; viii., 1858, 101, 108, 256; Scott's Introduc. Perkins, Thomas Handasyd, 1764–1854, an eminent merchant and philanthropist, the founder of several institutions, and benefactor to many more, in Boston, Massachusetts, his native city, wrote, whilst abroad in Europe, and at other times, interesting Diaries and autobiographical sketches, partly republished in Cary's Memoir of his life; and upon this ground we enroll his name in our list of authors. See Memoir of Thomas Handasyd Perkins; containing Extracts from his Diaries and Letters, with an Appendix by Thomas G. Cary, Bost., 1856, 8vo, pp. 304; review of this Memoir in N. Amer. Perkins of an edit. of his Speeches; Mrs. Sigourney's Post Meridian, 4th ed., 1858, 287; E. Everett's Mount Vernon Papers, 1860, 197, 202. Mr. Cary was also the author of several pamphlets and fugitive papers.

Perkins, W. O. The Golden Robin; for Public Schools, &c.: Part 1, Musical Notation; Part 2, Exercises adapted to Physical Action; Part 3, Pieces for General Use; Part 4, Sacred Music, Bost., 1868, 12mo.

Perkins, William, 1558–1602, a learned Calvinist divine, a native of Warton, Warwickshire, educated at, and Fellow and Tutor of, Christ College, Cambridge, first preached to the prisoners in Cambridge jail, and afterwards officiated as preacher of St. Andrew's Church, Cambridge. He was the author of Expositions of the Creed; of the Lord's Prayer; of chap. i.–v. (completed by Rodolfe Cudworthe) of the Epistle to the Galatians; of St. Matthew v.–vii.; of Romans i.–iii.; Commentarie on Heb. xi.; Cases of Conscience; and many doctrinal, practical, and controversial treatises. Several of his works were trans. into Latin, French, Dutch, and Spanish; and their popularity at home is evinced by the number of collective edits. of them, each in 3 vols. fol., issued shortly after his death,—between 1605 and 1635.

We notice: Works newly corrected according to his own Copies, Lon., 3 vols. fol.: i., 1616; ii., 1617; iii., 1618. The last dates which we find are 1626, '31, and '35. Opera, Latin, Genev., 1611. It is not a little remarkable that, in this day of the exhumation of so much buried theology, Perkins's works have not been republished. Yet few writers have been more commended.

"Perkins's sermons were all law and all gospel; a rare instance of those opposite gifts meeting in so eminent a degree in the same preacher. Even the vehemence and thunder of Boanerges to awaken sinners to a sense of their sin and danger, and to drive them from destruction; and the persuasion and comfort of Barnabas to pour the oil and wine of gospel consolation into their wounded spirits. Bishop Montagu preached his funeral sermon, and spoke in high commendation of his learning, piety, and labours."—Brook's Lives of the Puritans.

"He excelled in a distinct judgment, a rare dexterity in clearing the obscure subtleties of the schools, and in an easy explication of the most perplexed subjects."—Bishop Hall.

"The Works of Perkins are distinguished for their piety, learning, extensive knowledge of the Scriptures, and strong Calvinistic argumentation. . . . The works of Perkins were highly esteemed by Job Orton, though far from being a thorough Calvinist himself."—Orme's Bibl. Bib.

"Perkins's Works are judicious, clear, full of matter and a deep Christian experience. I could wish ministers, especially young ones, would read him, as they would find large materials for composition."—Job Orton.

"For his time, his style is remarkably pure and neat: he had a clear head, and excelled in defining and analyzing subjects. His style is highly Calvinistic: but he carried the idea of reprobation too far. . . . His Commentary on the Epistle to the Galatians is equally sound as Luther's, but more methodical and comprehensive."—Dr. E. Williams's C. P., ed. 1843, 293, 305.

"His works have been too much undervalued: learned, spiritual, Calvinistic, and practical; . . . holy and evangelical."—Bickersteth's C. S., ed. 1844, 414, 444.

"The science of morals, according to Mosheim, or rather of casuistry, which Calvin had left in a rude and imperfect state, is confessed to have been first reduced into some kind of form and explained with some accuracy and precision by Perkins."—Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, i. 561. See, also, ii. 508.

"The narrative of the expedition, written by Commodore Perry himself. The language of the narrative is remarkable for its Saxon strength and clearness. Its style is Addisonian in elegance and purity. . . . 'He could not endure the egotism of the I;' . . . he resolved to write in the third person, with just freedom, and to ask some friend to edit the volumes as the quasi historian of the expedition. And in this aspect they are published to the world. Such was the modesty of the author," &c.—F. VINTON, D.D.: Oration on the Annals of Rhode Island, N. York, 1863, 41.

Peter of Blois, (Petrus Blesensis,) so called from the place of his birth, d. about 1200 in England, studied at Tours, Paris, and Boulogne, was invited to England by Henry II., and became Archdeacon of Bath, Chancellor of Canterbury, and Archdeacon of London. He came to England probably about 1170, and until the death of this monarch, in 1189, enjoyed great influence in affairs of Church and State; but he was no favourite with Henry's successor, Richard I., and in a letter (Epist. CXLIX.) to his friends at the new court he draws an affecting contrast between his present and former position. From 1191 to 1195 he no doubt found a melancholy satisfaction in the duties of secretary to Queen Eleanor, the widow of his great patron. He is supposed to have died soon after 1198. He was the author of Epistles in Latin, tracts or Opuscula, chiefly theological, Sermons, and Poemata; and there is ascribed to him a continuation (see Rerum Anglia Scrip. Vet., ed. Tho. Gale, 1684, fol., tom. i., 108–130) of the History formerly attributed to Ingulphus, (see p. 933, ante.) It is fair to presume that the continuation is quite as well entitled to the name of a forgery as is the original. See his Epistolæ Select. ad Siculos in Carussi Bibl. Hist., i.; Epistola Duæ in Bibl. Patr. Gallandii, xiv. 633. It is asserted that a work of Peter's on Canon Law and Process has been recently brought to light: see the Zeitschrift für geschichtliche Rechtswissenschaft, vol. vii. 207. For notices of this author and edits. of his works, see Cave; Dupin; Wright's Biog. Brit. Lit., Anglo-Norman Period, 366–379. Epistole Magistri Petri was printed at Brussels as early as about 1480; of his Opera Omnia the collection edited by Pierre de Gussanville, Paris, 1567, fol., (reprinted in vol. xxiv. of the Magna Bibliotheca Patrum of Lyons, pp. 911–1365,) had formerly the reputation of being the best; but there has been pub. within the last few years Petri Blesensis, Opera Omnia, nunc primum in Anglia ope Codicum Manuscriptorum Editionumque Optimarum; edidit J. A. Giles, LL.D., Oxonii, 1847, 4 vols. 8vo. This edit. the student can by no means dispense with.

"No other documents throw so much light on the literary jealousies and feuds of the latter half of the twelfth century, as the letters of Peter of Blois, who himself appears to have been by no means free from them. . . . The chief fault in the style of Peter of Blois is an affectation of far-fetched comparisons and allegories, (which was a common fault in the writers of his day,) and the heaping together of a multiplicity of citations from ancient authors, for which he was remarkable even among his contemporaries."—Wright's Biog. Brit. Lit., 373, 374.

"His [Irving's] physician, Dr. Peters, one of the most attentive and assiduous of his profession."—WM. C. BRYANT: Discourse on Washington Irving, April 3, 1860. See, also, Life and Letters of Irving.

Peters, Hugh, 1599–1660, a native of Fowey, Cornwall; educated at Jesus College and Trinity College, Cambridge; after treading the boards as a comedian, took holy orders in the Church of England, and officiated for some time as Lecturer of Saint Sepulchre's, London. From want of conformity to the requisitions of the Law or the precepts of the Gospel, he was involved in trouble which caused him to fly to Rotterdam, where he became co-pastor with the Rev. Dr. William Ames; and in this station, as in his London pastorate, he seems to have used his powerful eloquence and pulpit eccentricities with great effect. In 1635 he emigrated to America; on Dec. 21, 1636, was settled as Pastor of the First Church at Salem, Massachusetts; in 1637 he was elected an overseer of Harvard College; in March, 1638, he was appointed by the General Court to assist in collecting and revising the Colonial Laws; in 1640 he associated Edward Norris with him in the pastorate of his church; Aug. 3, 1641, he sailed for England in company with Rev. Thomas Welde and William Hibbins, the three being deputed to represent to the Home Government "the sense of the colony upon the laws of excise and trade;" arrived at London, he took an active part in the opposition to Charles I., for which, at the Restoration, he was hanged and quartered. He was the author of Good Work for a Good Magistrate, Lon., 1651, 12mo, (in which he recommends the burning of the historical records in the Tower;) a Dying Father's Last Legacy to an Only Child, 1660, 8vo, 1717; and a number of political tracts, occasional sermons, &c. He also pub. Amesii Lectiones in Psalmos; cum Epist. Dedic., 1647, 8vo, (see p. 58, ante.) Concerning the character of Peters the most opposite opinions have prevailed. Peters, Richard, D.D., of a very respectable family of Liverpool, England, came to Philadelphia, as a clergyman of the Church of England, about 1735: Assistant of Rev. A. Cummings, Rector of Christ Church, Philadelphia, 1735–37: Rector of Christ Church and St. Peter's, 1762–75: d. July 10, 1776, aged 72 years. Dr. Peters was also Secretary of the Land Office, Secretary to several of the Governors of the Province of Penna., and a member of the Governor's Council until his decease. See Rev. Dr. Dorr's Historical Account of Christ Church, &c., N. York, 1841, 12mo; Sprague's Annals, v., Episcopalian, 1859, 88–91. Dr. Peters pub. Two Serms. on 1 Cor. x. 13 and Rom. xii. 21, Phila., 1737, 4to, and a Serm. on Education, 1751, 8vo.

Peters, Richard, 1744–1828, nephew of the preceding, a native of the vicinity of Philadelphia, and a graduate of the University of Penna.; Secretary of the Board of War, 1776–81; member of the Congress of the U. States, 1781; Judge of the U. States District Court in Pennsylvania, 1789 until his death; was a good scholar, an excellent judge, a practical agriculturist, and a famous wit. Admiralty Decisions in the District Court of the United States for the Pennsylvania Districts, &c., [from 1780–1807,] Phila., 1807, 2 vols. 8vo.

"The decisions have been regarded as generally sound, sufficiently learned, and well reported."—Hoffman's Leg. Stu., 471–472, q. v.

"I have learned much in his school, and owe him many thanks for his rich contributions to the maritime jurisprudence of our country."—Judge Story to Richard Peters, Aug. 30, 1838: Story's Life and Corresp., 1851, ii. 549.

"Beside him [Bushrod Washington] there sat, during nearly all his life, a most pleasant district judge, Richard Peters, many years his senior, a very good Admiralty judge, but much disposed to leave the watch on deck in all weathers to his sleepless colleague, putting forth now and then for his refreshment some facetia or other—pun, quip, crank, or quiddit—for which he was very famous."—From a pamphlet entitled Bushrod Washington, 1858, 8vo, p. 17, (by Horace Binney, LL.D., of the Phila. Bar.)

See, also, Correspondence of Sir John Sinclair, ii. 71. Judge Peters published many papers in the Memoirs of the Philadelphia Agricultural Society, of which he was President. To him we are indebted for the introduction of the use of gypsum in agriculture. He put forth a pamphlet on this subject as early as 1797. On the formation of the new Constitution, President Washington offered him the post of Comptroller of the Treasury of the United States; but the judgeship was preferred by him. He died on the same spot where he was born eighty-four years before,—the country-seat at Belmont, inherited by him from his father. See An Address on the Death of the Hon. Peters, Samuel. Serm., Lon., 1787, 4to.

Peters, Samuel Andrew, LL.D., 1735–1826, a native of Hebron, Conn., of the same family as Hugh Peters, (supra,) graduated at Yale College, 1757; was ordained Deacon and Priest of the Church of England in London, 1759; returned to America in 1760, and took charge of the church at Hebron, occasionally officiating at Hartford and other towns in the vicinity; disapproved of the American Revolution, and returned to England in 1774 and obtained a pension and a grant for property confiscated by the patriots; pub. in 1785, in London, A Letter to the Rev. John Tyler, against Universal Salvation; elected Bishop of Vermont in 1794, but never consecrated; again returned to America in 1805, and resided principally in New York until his death, which occurred in his 91st year. We have already referred (see PETERS, HUGH) to his History of the Rev. Hugh Peters, A.M., 1807, 8vo; and he published a brief History of Hebron; but he is much better (or rather more widely) known by his General History of Connecticut, &c., by a Gentleman of the Province, Lon., 1781, 8vo; 2d ed., 1782, 8vo; 3d ed., New Haven, 1829, 12mo. This is not considered the most veracious of chronicles. Abroad, the London Monthly Review remarked,

"We observe in it so many marks of party spleen and idle credulity that we do not hesitate to pronounce it altogether unworthy of the public attention," (April, 1782, 252;)

at home, Dr. Dwight (Travels in New England, &c., iii. 495) refers to it as

"that mass of folly and falsehood commonly called Peters's History of Connecticut."

"It contains many statements which are alike apocryphal and ludicrous; and I am not aware that it is ever quoted as historical authority."—JOHN S. PETERS, M.D., Governor of Connecticut: Sprague's Annals, v., Episcopalian, 1859, 191–200.

"Most American readers have heard of the 'Blue Laws' of New Haven, which have been precisely described as making 'one thin volume in folio.' . . . The existence at any time of a code containing provisions such as are quoted above, is a mere fabrication, nor is there any record of so much as single judgments pronounced agreeably to the tenor of those provisions. The anonymous work which first vented the fiction was published in London in 1781, and a second edition appeared in the following year. The author was Samuel Peters, a royalist and refugee."—J. G. PALFREY: Hist. of New England, vol. ii., 1860, 32, n.

See, also, N. Amer. Rev., Oct. 1860, 422.

"Among other ridiculously false charges made against Peters is this,—that he forged or invented the so-called Blue Laws of Connecticut,—a charge which is sufficiently disproved by the fact that that celebrated code was in existence and common use before he was born."—A. B. CHAPIN, D.D., Dec. 8, 1857: Sprague's Annals, ut supra, 195.

Petrie, Henry, d. 1842, in his 74th year, Keeper of the Chancery Records in the Tower of London since 1819, in 1816 proposed the plan of a Corpus Historicum, or collection of materials for the History of Great Britain, somewhat on the plan of Dom Bouquet and Muratori. This, it will be remembered, was a warmly-cherished project of Gibbon the historian: see his Miscell. Works, ed. 1837, 834–842; Decline and Fall, ed. 1837, 618, n.; PINKERTON, JOHN. In 1723 he commenced his labours under the authority of the Record Commissioners. Like Thomas Baker, (supra,) Mr. Petrie overloaded himself with materials which he was never able to bring to the press. At the time of his death one vol. only of his work, and that edited by Messrs. Price, Parry, and Owen, had been pub. Mr. Petrie's own vol., put to press (with the preceding) in 1830, was not pub. until 1848, r. fol., £5 5*s.*; edited by H. Petrie, Thomas Duffus Hardy, (see p. 785, ante,) and Rev. John Sharpe. It bears the title Monumenta Historica Britannica; or, Materials for the History of Great Britain from the Earliest Period to the Norman Conquest. Contains: Gildas; Nennius; Bede; the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle, with English and Latin Versions; Asser's Alfred; various Chronicles; Excerpta; Descriptive Catalogue of Coins, with Plates; Facsimiles of MSS.; Map of Britannia Romana, &c. See Lon. Gent. Mag., 1851, ii. 628; Lon. Reader, 1865, ii. 340.

Petty, Sir William, M.D., M.P., 1623–1687, a native of Romsey, Hampshire, was educated principally on the continent; in 1648 taught anatomy and chemistry at Oxford; in 1649 was created a Doctor of Physic, and elected a Fellow of Brazen-nose College; in 1650 was appointed to the anatomical professorship in the University; in 1652 became physician to the army in Ireland; in 1654 greatly distinguished himself by his survey of forfeited estates in Ireland, and, among other employments in that country, acted as Secretary to Henry Cromwell, Lord Lieutenant; in 1661 was knighted by Charles II. His widow was created Baroness Shelburne: his eldest son succeeded to the title, and on his death without issue it was revived in Henry, the second son, great-uncle of the first Marquis of Lansdowne. He was a man of great sagacity and of remarkable powers of invention and combination. Lists of his many treatises on subjects of political economy, politics, education, &c. (pub. 1647–93) will be found in Watt's Bibl. Brit. and Bohn's Lowndes, Pt. 7, (1861,) 1844–45; and notices of his life, writings, and inventions are recorded in Athen. Oxon.; Biog. Brit.; Ward's Gresham Professors; Aubrey's MSS., in Letters by Eminent Persons, 1813, 3 vols. 8vo; Pepys's Memoirs; Evelyn's Diary and Corresp.; Hallam's Constit. Hist. of Eng.; Hallam's Lit. Several Essays on Political Arithmetic, 1699, 1711, 1751, 8vo; 4th ed., with Author's Life, 1755, 8vo. 12. Tracts relating chiefly to Ireland, containing: I. A Treatise of Taxes and Contributions; II. Essays on Political Arithmetic; III. The Political Anatomy of Ireland. To which is prefixed his Last Will, 1769, 8vo. It is very difficult to obtain a complete set, or to know what constitutes a complete set, of Petty's treatises; some are still in MS. in the Bodleian Library, &c. We heartily endorse the complaint and suggestion of Mr. McCulloch:

"It is to be regretted that we have nothing like a complete or respectable edition of the works of this extraordinary man. . . . Treatises of such importance and authenticity should not be buried in obscurity. Nor could the noble successors of Petty, to whom much of his talent as well as his estates have descended, raise any better monument to his memory than the publication of a complete edition of his works."—Lit. of Polit. Econ., 1845, 212.

The late Lord Kerry at the time of his death (in 1836) was employed upon a Life of Sir William Petty, to be accompanied with a reprint of some of his works. Mr. Moore had some idea of completing this design, and he was urged by Mr. McCulloch to publish a complete edition of Sir William's works. It is to be regretted that the project was not carried out. See Thomas Moore's Memoirs, &c., 1856, vii. 152, 167.

"One of the founders of the [Royal] Society, Sir William Petty, created the science of political arithmetic, the humble but indispensable handmaid of political philosophy. . . . "With a mind capable of just and novel theories."—Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, iii. 454.

But he who would have a just idea of the extraordinary accomplishments of Petty must read the enthusiastic eulogy of John Evelyn, ("neither an unpractised nor an undiscerning judge,"—Lord Macaulay: Miscell., 1854, ii. 298,) who declares,

"If I were a Prince, I should make him my second Counsellor at least. There is nothing difficult to him."—Evelyn's Diary and Corresp., ed. 1857, ii. 96.

Philips, Ambrose, 1675–1749, a native of Leicestershire, graduated at St. John's College, Cambridge, B.A. 1696–97, M.A. 1700, in 1700, Camb., 8vo, also 1703, 8vo, abridged Hacket's Life of Archbishop Williams, and in 1709 pub. in Tonson's Miscellany, vol. vi., six Pastorals, (Pope's Pastorals conclude the volume;) printed in the 12th No. of the Tatler, May 7, 1709, his poetical Letter from Copenhagen, dated March 9, 1709, and addressed to the Earl of Dorset; subsequently translated from the French, for Tonson, The Persian Tales; in Feb. 1712, gained great reputation by his tragedy of The Distressed Mother — little more than a free translation of Racine's Andromaque, but made popular by the interest of the Whigs, and an epilogue of Addison's, ascribed to Budgell, (see The Spectator, Nos. 290, 335, 338, 341;) was greatly gratified, a short time before this dramatic success, by Addison's commendation in The Spectator, Nos. 223, 400, and 523, (see, also, The Guardian, No. 30,) of his translation of Sappho's Hymn to Venus, and of his "admirable pastorals and winter-piece," (the Letter from Copenhagen, supra;) was driven to swords'-points with Pope in consequence of an ironical comparison by the latter, pub. in The Guardian, No. 40, April 27, 1713, between his own Pastorals and those of Philips, in which the superiority is professedly awarded to the critic's rival; was unmercifully lashed by the Twickenham bard in his treatise of Martinus Scriblerus on the Art of Sinking in Poetry, in the Dunciad, The Epistle to Arbuthnot, &c.; hung up a rod at Button's coffee-house with which he promised to settle scores with the satirist when he should encounter him at that rendezvous of wits,—an encounter which Pope very prudently avoided by keeping at a respectful distance from the locus penitentiæ; fell to writing "poems of short lines" in a style of ultra-simplicity ridiculed by Henry Carey, (see p. 338, ante,) and by Pope, as "Namby Pamby," and imitated by Isaac Hawkins Browne in his Pipe of Tobacco; appointed, by the interest of his Whig friends, Paymaster of the Lottery, (in 1715,) and a Justice of the Peace for Westminster; in 1721 produced two tragedies,—(now forgotten,)—The Briton, and Humphry, Duke of Gloucester; in 1718 engaged in the periodical entitled The Freethinker, (3 vols. 12mo,) in which he had the assistance, among others, of Dr. Hugh Boulter, subsequently Archbishop of Armagh, who took Philips to Ireland and procured him the representation of Armagh in the Irish Parliament; in 1726 was made Secretary to the Lord Chancellor, and in 1734 became Registrar of the Prerogative Court at Dublin; resigned his post and returned to England in 1748, and lived on an annuity of £400, which he had purchased, until the 18th of June in the next year, when he died from the effects of a stroke of the palsy. A collection of his works was pub., Lon., 1765, fol., under the title of Pastorals, Epistles, Odes, and other Original Poems. For notices of Philips and his productions, see Pope's Works, Bowles's ed.; Tatler, Spectator, and Guardian, with Notes, ed. 1806, Cibber's Lives; Johnson's Lives of the Most Eminent Eng. "Of 'The Distressed Mother' not much is pretended to be his own, and therefore it is no subject of criticism: his other two tragedies, I believe, are not below mediocrity, nor above it. . . . The pieces that please best are those which, from Pope and Pope's adherents, procured him the name of Namby Pamby, the poems of short lines, by which he paid his court to all ages and characters, from Walpole the 'steerer of the realm,' to Miss Pulteney in the nursery. The numbers are smooth and sprightly; and the diction is seldom faulty. . . . He has added nothing to English poetry, yet at least half his book deserves to be read: perhaps he valued most himself that part which the critic would reject."—Dr. Johnson: ubi supra.

> Who turns a Persian tale for half a crown;
> Just writes to make his barrenness appear,
> And strains from hard-bound brains eight lines a year."

Philips, Catherine or Katherine, 1631–1664, the daughter of a London merchant named Fowler, whilst very young was married to James Philips, of the priory of Cardigan, and afterwards accompanied the Viscountess of Dungannon to Ireland. During the civil wars her husband suffered in his estate; and it is to this cause that we owe the philosophical lines of his wife addressed To my Antenor. The praises of "The Matchless Orinda" (for she was so styled by her contemporaries) were celebrated by Anne Killigrew, (herself immortalized by Dryden,) the Earls of Orrery and Roscommon, Dryden, James Tyrrel, Jeremy Taylor, who addressed to her his Discourse of the Nature, Offices, and Measures of Friendship, 1657, 8vo, and Cowley and Flatman, who wrote odes on her death. Her epistles to Sir Charles Cotterel were printed in 1705, 8vo, under the title of Letters from Orinda to Poliarchus. Her trans. of Corneille's Tragedy of Pompey (which was several times acted in London in 1663–64) was pub., Lon., 1663, 4to. In 1664, 8vo, some one pub. without her knowledge a collection of her Poems. This she regretted, and especially as they were very incorrectly given; though she assures us that "Should any one have brought me those copies corrected and amended, and a thousand pounds to have bought my permission for their being printed, he should not have obtained it.

After her death appeared a genuine edit. of her pieces, under the title of Poems by Mrs. Katherine Philips, the Matchless Orinda: to which is added Monsieur Corneille's Pompey and Horace, Tragedies, with several other Translations out of French, 1667, fol. The Crooked Sixpence, with a learned Preface, was pub. 1743, 4to. For notices of the Matchless Orinda, see Langbaine's Dramatick Poets; Cibber's Lives; Biog. Dramat.; Bliss's Wood's Athen. Philips, John, 1676–1708, a native of Bampton, Oxfordshire, of which place his father, Stephen Philips, D.D., Archdeacon of Salop, was minister, was entered at Christ Church, Oxford, in 1694; pub. a poem in Memory of Queen Anne in 1695, fol.; contributed his Splendid Shilling, a mock-heroic poem in imitation of the verse of Paradise Lost, to a Collection of Poems printed in 1701, 8vo; pub. Blenheim, a Poem, in 1705, fol.; and gave to the world in 1708, 8vo, his principal production,—Cyder; a Poem, in Two Books. He also pub. an excellent Latin ode—Ode ad Henricum St. John, Armig., 12mo—dedicated to his patron, Lord Bolingbroke, in return for a present of wine and tobacco. Philips meditated, but, perhaps fortunately for his fame, did not live to finish, a poem on The Last Day,—"a subject," to quote the words of Dr. Johnson, "on which no mind can hope to equal expectation." Of The Splendid Shilling an imperfect edit. was pub., separately, in 1703, 12mo, and another in 1705; a correct edition, in folio, was also issued in 1705; another edit. appeared in 1719, 12mo. A new edit. of Blenheim was pub. in 1719, 12mo; and an excellent impression of Cyder, with Notes, Provincial and Historical, by Charles Dunster, 8vo, gratified the admirers of Philips in 1791. In 1762, 12mo, appeared a collective edit. of his pieces, under the title of Poems attempted in the Style of Milton, by Mr. John Philips, with a new Account of his life and writings. In his new ed. of Johnson's Lives of the Most Eminent English Poets, 1854, 3 vols. 8vo, Mr. P. Cunningham has added to the Life of Philips a Fragment, written by Edmund Smith, upon the Works of Philips,—translated from the Bodleian Manuscripts. See, also, the Life of Philips in the Biographia Britannica.

The pertinacity with which Philips followed up his attempted imitation of Paradise Lost—for he essays it in Blenheim and in Cyder, as well as in The Splendid Shilling—argues a radical defect of good taste for which much greater genius would hardly be accepted as an atonement:

"Philips," says a great contemporaneous master of criticism, "has succeeded extremely well in his imitation of 'Paradise Lost,' but was quite wrong in endeavouring to imitate on such a subject."—Pope: Spence's Anecdotes, Singer's ed., 174.

Of his imitation of Milton in The Splendid Shilling, and in Blenheim, Dr. Johnson remarks,

"To degrade the sounding words and stately construction of Milton by an application [in The Splendid Shilling] to the lowest and most trivial things, gratifies the mind with a momentary triumph over that grandeur which hitherto held its captives in admiration. The words and things are presented with a new appearance; and novelty is always grateful where it gives no pain. But the merit of such performances begins and ends with the first author. . . . [In Blenheim] He imitates Milton's numbers indeed, but imitates them very injudiciously. Deformity is easily copied; and whatever there is in Milton which the reader wishes away, all that is obsolete, peculiar, or licentious, is accumulated with great care by Philips. . . . Those asperities, therefore, that are venerable in the 'Paradise Lost' are contemptible in the 'Blenheim.'"—Life of Philips.

"One excellence of The Splendid Shilling is that it is short. Disguise can gratify no longer than it deceives."—Dr. Johnson: Life of Somerville.

"To the poem on Cider," remarks Johnson, "written in imitation of the 'Georgics,' may be given this peculiar praise, that it is grounded in truth, that the precepts which it contains are exact and just, and that it is, therefore, at once a book of entertainment and of science. This I was told by [Philip] Miller, the great gardener and botanist, whose expression was that there were many books written on the same subject in prose which do not contain so much truth as that poem. . . . What study could confer, Philips had obtained; but natural deficience cannot be supplied. He seems not born to greatness and elevation. He is never lofty, nor does he often surprise with unexpected excellence; but perhaps to his last poem may be applied what Tully said of the work of Lucretius, that it is written with much art, though with few blazes of genius."—Life of Philips.

"The fame of this poet (says the grave doctor of the last century) will endure as long as Blenheim is remembered or cider drunk in England. He might have added, as long as tobacco shall be smoked; for Philips has written more meritoriously about the Indian weed than about his native apple; and his Muse appears to be more in her element amidst the smoke of the pipe than of the battle."—Campbell's Specimens.

It is a curious fact that the poet celebrates the virtues of tobacco in all his poems save Blenheim. A brief criticism upon Blenheim by Lord Macaulay, who with great felicity styles Philips "the poet of the English vintage," (Essays, iii. 488,) will be found in his Lordship's Critical and Historical Essays, ed. 1854, iii. 386–387. "A book which is the result of deep study, profound erudition, and sincere conviction."—Lon. Reader, 1864, ii. 443.

Read with this work: I. Ancient Law: its Connection with the Early History of Society, and its Relation to Modern Ideas, Lon., 1861, 8vo; 2d ed., 1864, 8vo; N. York, 1864, 8vo; II. Studies in Roman Law, &c., by Lord Mackenzie, Edin., 1862, 8vo. Dr. Phillimore drew up the case in behalf of Gen. Sir C. J. Napier's claim to the prize-money refused him by the E. I. Company, (see Sir W. Napier's Life of his brother,) and contributed an essay on the History of the Canon Law to the Oxford Essays, and papers to Blackwood's Magazine, &c.

Phillimore, Joseph, D.C.L., M.P., 1775–1855; Regius Prof. of Civil Law in the University of Oxford, 1808; educated at Christ Church, Oxford; gained great distinction both as a jurist and as a classical scholar, and held many responsible offices. From 1817 to 1830 he was a member of Parliament; in 1834 was appointed King's Advocate in the Admiralty Court, and in 1846 Judge of the Consistory Court of Gloucester. Notices of his life will be found in Lon. Gent. Mag., March, 1855, 319–320, and in Lon. Law Review. May, 1855, 69–71. 1. Reflections on the Nature and Extent of the Licence Trade, Lon., 1811, 8vo. Anon.; 2d ed., with name, 1811.

"A tract as much admired for the great knowledge of history and of jurisprudence which it displayed, as for the excellence of its composition."—Lon. Law Review, xxii. 69.

2. A Letter on a Notice given by Mr. Brougham of a Motion respecting the Orders in Council and the Licence Trade, 1812, 8vo. 3. Reports of Cases Argued and Determined in the Ecclesiastical Courts at Doctors' Commons and in the High Court of Delegates, H. T. 1809–M. T. 1824, 1813–27, 3 vols. r. 8vo, (vol. i., Pt. 1, was first pub. in 1816, 8vo,) £3 13*s.* 6*d.* Repub. in Johnson's English Eccles. Reports, Phila., 3 vols. 8vo. 4. Reports of Cases Argued and Determined in the Arches and Prerogative Courts of Canterbury and in the High Court of Delegates, containing the Judgments of the Right Hon. Sir George Lee, from H. 1752 to M. 1788, 2 vols. 8vo, 1832–33. Of great value. See 10 Lon. Law Mag., 327. 5. Report of the Winchester and New College Case, 1840, 8vo. Dr. Phillimore contributed a few papers to the earlier numbers of the Edinburgh Review. To his abilities as a judge Lord Lyndhurst, when Lord Chancellor, paid the highest tribute.

French of M. Dupanloup, Bishop of Orleans, Lon., 1868, 12mo; Bost., 1869.

Phillimore, Sir Robert Joseph, Q.C., D.C.L., M.P., Chancellor of the dioceses of Oxford, Chichester, and Salisbury, second son of Joseph Phillimore, (supra,) b. 1810, and educated at Christ Church, Oxford; was admitted an Advocate of Doctors' Commons, 1839; called to the bar at the Middle Temple, 1841; and sat as M.P. for Tavistock, as a Liberal Conservative, 1853–57; appointed H.M.'s Advocate-General, and knighted, 1862. He is also Judge of the Cinque Ports. His works, with the exception of No. 1, were published under the name of Robert or Sir Robert Phillimore. 1. Report of the Judgment in the Cause of Belcher the Wife against Belcher the Husband, Lon., 1835, 8vo. 2. Report of the Proceedings in the Visitorial Court at York, &c. against the Dean of York, 1841, 8vo. 3. The Study of the Civil and Canon Law, 1843, 8vo. 4. Thoughts on the Law of Divorce in England, 1844, 8vo. Not commended in Lon. Law Review, i. 377–381. 5. Memoirs and Correspondence of George, Lord Lyttelton, from 1734 to 1773, 1845, 2 vols. 8vo. Criticised with severity by J. Wilson Croker, in Lon. Quar. Rev., June, 1846, 216–267. See Phillimore, John George, D.C.L., M.P., No. 2. Treated with more respect in Lon. Gent. Commentaries on International Law, 1854–61, 4 vols. 8vo; Phila., 1854–61, 4 vols. 8vo. (Law Lib.)

"The fruit of long previous study and preparation; and we notice it here as a work which bids fair to remedy the deficiency which has so long existed in our legal libraries, and which even the admirable works of Story and Wheaton are insufficient to fill up."—*Lon. "We cannot altogether subscribe to the high eulogium [in Woolsey's Introduction to the Study of International Law, 2d ed., N. York, 1864] on Phillimore's Commentaries. Without wishing to detract from its merits, we find some truth in the criticism of 'Historicus,' [see Wheaton, Henry, LL.D., No. 9,] who calls it a digest of opinions and authorities, rather than a scientific disquisition on the topics to which they refer."—*N. "If he learns to think of his subject; to regard the sense always, even in ornamental passages; to speak plainly and rationally; to use figures only when they come naturally in, and then to use them as not abusing them—we will venture to promise him very considerable success in the arduous pursuit of oratorical renown."—p. 70.

In 1831 appeared Speeches of Phillips, Curran, and Grattan, Phila., 1 vol. 8vo, 1846, 8vo. 17. Address to the Electors of Sligo, 1818, 8vo; now first Arranged and Collected. 18. The 1st ed. of this work was written, Mr. Phillips assures us, in "twenty-two days:" the late eds. mainly consist of matter before unpublished, arranged at leisure. Lord Brougham's opinion of this work (from his Statesmen of Time Geo. III., ed. 1856, ii. 171; see, also, 336) has been quoted in our notice of CURRAN, JOHN PHILPOT, (p. 461, supra;) Lord Lansdowne's and Mr. Moore's opinions were not so favourable:

"1818, Dec. 21*st*. Read some of Phillips's 'Recollections of Curran,' which Lord L. sent me, and which he said was even worse than he expected from the pen of the orator. It is certainly in wretched taste; but to every one who knew Curran there are some things in it interesting."—Moore's Memoirs, &c., ii., 1853, 241. See, also, Lon. Month. Rev., lxxxvii. 74.

The London Law Review (xiv. 166–183: review of ed. of 1851) regards the volume "as equally honourable to the head and the heart of its writer." A review of the N. York ed., 1818, 8vo, by W. J. A meagre biographical notice of Mr. Phillips appeared in Lon. Gent. Mag., 1859, i. 434, (Obituary.)

Mr. Phillips was severely censured for his course in defence of Courvoisier, the Swiss valet who murdered his sleeping master, Lord William Russell, in Norfolk Street, Park Lane, in May, 1840. The censure was revived in the Examiner newspaper in November, 1849, and Mr. Samuel Warren suggested to Mr. Phillips the propriety of his contradicting what Mr. W. believed to be erroneous assertions. This suggestion led to the publication in the London Times of Nov. 20th, 1849, of two letters on the subject between Mr. Warren and Mr. Phillips: see Correspondence between Samuel Warren, Esq., and Charles Phillips, Esq., relative to the Trial of Courvoisier, with Preface and Appendix, 1849, 8vo. See, also, the Times from May 7th to June 30th, 1840; Examiner for June 27th and July 11th, 1840; Nov. 24th and Dec. 1st and 8th, 1849; Annual Register for 1840, 229–244; Minutes of Evidence taken in Short-hand at the Central Criminal Court; pub. by Authority, vol. xii. 216–271; Wm. C. Townsend's Modern State Trials, 1850, 2 vols. 8vo; Lon. Gent. Mag., Nov. 1850, 523–524; Lon. Law Rev., xi. 376–436, (copied in Bost. Liv. Age, xxv. 289–311;) Judge Sharswood's Professional Ethics, 1854; Lieber's Civil Liberty, &c., 2d ed., 1859, 248, n.

The profound publicist last referred to finds himself unable to acquit Mr. Phillips:

"It must be allowed that the defence is not successful, though ingenious."

See, also, Lieber on The Character of the Gentleman, 3d ed., Phila., 1864, 12mo, 68, n. The London Law Review (ubi supra) gives a different verdict. We have ventured some observations on the morality of legal advocates in our life of Bacon, pp. 89, 93, supra. Of Mr. Phillips's remarkable style of oratory Sir James Mackintosh, as may readily be supposed, was no admirer.

"Plunket," he remarked to Alexander H. Everett, "if he had come earlier into Parliament, so as to have learned the trade, would probably have excelled all our orators. He and Counsellor Phillips (or O'Garnish, as he is nicknamed here) are at the opposite points of the scale. O'Garnish's style is pitiful to the last degree. He ought by common consent to be driven from the bar."—N. Amer. Rev., Oct. 1832, 448, n.

But Christopher North, a most unmerciful critic, both in his anger and in his sport, has better things to say of Phillips; and one or two of these things we present to the reader:

"Charles Phillips was worth a gross of Sheils. There were frequent flashes of fine imagination, and strains of genuine feeling, in his speeches, that showed Nature intended him for an orator. In the midst of his most tedious and tasteless exaggerations, you still feel that Charles Phillips had a heart," &c.—Noctes Ambros., Dec. 1828; Blackw. Mag., xxiv. 703. See, also, xii. 58; Moore's Memoirs, &c., vii., 1856, 44.

To Phillips was ascribed, we know not with what truth, Thurtell's famous defence read by the latter during his trial for the murder of Weare in 1824.

Phillips, Edward, preacher at St. Saviour's, Southwark; a Calvinist; died about 1603. Certaine Godly and Learned Serms., Lon., 1607, 4to. Taken down by and pub. from the MS. of Henry (afterwards Sir Henry) Yelverton.

Phillips, Edward, b. in London, 1630, the son of Edward Phillips, Secondary in the Crown Office, by Anne, sister of John Milton; received his early education under his celebrated uncle, (see p. 1297, supra;) in 1648 became a student of Magdalene Hall, Oxford, where he remained until 1651; pub. a number of books in London, and d. between 1696 and 1698. 1. A New World of Words; or, General English Dictionary, &c., Lon., 1657, '62, '69, '71, '78, 1706, fol.; greatly enlarged by Philobibl., 1720, fol. Severely handled by Thomas Blount (see p. 209, supra) in his World of Errors discovered in the New World of Words, 1673, fol. He charges Phillips with borrowing largely from his Glossographia, pub. in 1656, 8vo. See Bliss's Wood's Athen. Oxon., iv. 761–762. Skinner, in his Etymologicon, exposes Phillips's ignorance in many instances. See, also, N. Amer. Rev., lxiv. 194, (by S. Willard.) 2. An ed. of Drummond of Hawthornden's Poems, 1656, 8vo. 3. Brydges, vol. i., (recording more than 160 English poets,) Canterbury, 1800, 8vo; some l. p., and 12 copies largest paper. Sir Egerton never pub. the 2d vol., as was promised. Of vol. i. he printed a new ed., Geneva, 1824, r. 8vo, 100 copies; again in 1828, (also 1830,) and in 1856, pp. 450, and Advertisement, 4 leaves. As already remarked, (p. 1298, ante,) Milton is supposed to have aided in this work.

"A work which I think discovers many traces of Milton's hand."—Warton's Hist. of Eng. Poet., ed. 1840, iii. 356. See, also, 29, 317.

"It contains criticisms far above the taste of that period. Among these is the judgment on Shakspeare."—Warton's ed. of Milton's Juvenile Poems.

Of the Preface Brydges declares (and Warton thinks the same) that "the opinions, nay, the very expressions, of Milton break out in almost every page."—Pref. to Theat. Poet. Anglic., 1800, xxxix.

Warton tells us (Hist. of Eng. Poet., iii. 356) that the work "is inaccurate in many circumstances;" and Anthony Wood calls it (Athen. Oxon., iv. 762) "a brief, roving and cursory account." But see Brydges's Preface, supra. Winstanley, the literary barber, borrowed without scruple from Theatrum Poetarum. 9. Supplement to Speed's Theatre, 1675, fol. 10. Dr. Bliss has added considerably to Wood's list of Phillips's publications, (Athen. Oxon., iv. 764–769.) Mr. Wood gives no flattering picture of Mr. Phillips,—describing him as "A man of very loose principles, atheistical, forsakes his wife and children, makes no provision for them,"—(ubi supra;)

but, as Anthony on the preceding page calls Phillips's famous relative "that villanous leading incendiary Joh. Milton, his uncle," the admirers of the poet will be disposed to question the faithfulness of the portrait of the nephew.

Phillips, John, D.C.L., Reader in (Professor of) Geology in the Univ. of Oxford, and Assistant General Secretary of the Brit. Assoc. for the Adv. of Sci., (for which he has edited 27 volumes of Reports of Transactions,) a nephew of William Smith, (infra.) the "Father of English Geology," b. 1800; was from 1815 to 1839 associated with his uncle in geological exploration and surveying, and has himself, from 1826 to 1866, contributed more than forty treatises—all of more or less value—to the literature of his favourite science. For a list of many of these—which include geological articles in the Encyclopædia Britannica, Encyclopædia Metropolitana, and Penny Cyclopædia—we refer the reader to vol. iv. of the Bibliographia Zoologiæ et Geologiæ of Agassiz

&c., and to the English Cyclopædia, Biography, iv. 806–807. Mr. Phillips's volumes are the following: 1. To Mr. Phillips we are also indebted for a Geological Map of the British Isles, 1842, a Geological Map of Yorkshire, 1853, a Letter in Replies to Essays and Reviews, 1862, 8vo, and Additions (some are also contributed by Prof. Owen and Robert Brown) to the last ed. of his predecessor's (the late Rev. Dr. Wm. Buckland,) Geology and Mineralogy, edited by Francis T. Buckland, 1858, 2 vols. 8vo. By his interesting Lectures on Geology, Zoology, &c., delivered in the principal towns of Great Britain, Mr. Phillips has stimulated many minds to the zealous pursuit of scientific knowledge; and as Professor of Geology in three institutions,—King's College, London, Trinity College, Dublin, and the University of Oxford, where he is also Keeper of the Museum,—and an efficient officer of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, he has also deserved, and we doubt not enjoys, the gratitude of his countrymen.

Phillips, Morgan, sometimes called Phillip Morgan, a zealous Roman Catholic divine, Fellow of Oriel College, Oxford, Principal of St. Mary Hall, 1546, was one of the founders of the English College at Douay, and d. there in 1570. He was one of the three selected to dispute with Peter Martyr on the eucharist, and pub., on that occasion, Disputatio de Sacramento Eucharistiæ in Univ. Oxon. habita, contra D. Pet. Martyr., 13 Mai, 1549. He also pub. A Treatise shewing the Regiment of Women is conformable to the Law of God and Nature, Liege, 1571, 8vo. Written in answer to Knox's work, The First Blast of the Trumpet, &c.: see Knox, John; Aylmer, or Ælmer, John. To Phillips also was ascribed the work noticed under Lesley, John, No. 1, (partially reprinted in Anderson's Collec. rel. to Mary Q. of Scots, vol. i.;) and it is quite probable that some copies appeared under his name. In the Monthly Magazine he published many essays under the signature of Common Sense. Among the works which go by his name (some of his books are published under assumed names) are: 10. Collection of Modern Voyages and Travels, 1805–9, 11 vols. 8vo. Repub. in 8vo monthly Pts., as New Voyages and Travels, 1819 to about 1824. See Pinkerton, John, No. 21. 11. Dictionary of the Arts and Civilization, 12mo. 12. Golden Rules of Social Philosophy, 1826, p. 8vo. 13. A Million of Facts, 12mo, 1835; N. York, 1836; 3d ed., 1846; last Lon. ed., 1862, p. 8vo. Sir Richard edited a number of school-books, in which his business was extensive. Whittaker & Co., of London, publish a large number of what are styled "Phillips's Educational Works,"—a list of which will be found in Lon. Athen., July 16, 1853, 869. Notices of Sir Richard will be found in Memoirs of the Public and Private Life of Sir Richard Phillips, Knt., 1808, 8vo; Lon. Gent. Mag., Aug. 1840, 212–214; Southey's Life and Corresp., chap. xv.; Nichols's Lit. Illust., viii., 1858, 512–513; Olphar Hamst's Hand-Book for Fictitious Names, 1868, 22, 25, 26, 33, 54, 98, 210; Thomas Moore's Memoirs, &c., iv., 1853, 296–297; Maginn's Odoherty Papers, ii. 210; Edin. Rev., vii. 436, (by Lord Jeffrey;) Blackw. Mag., xii. 704; xiv. 324; xxii. 125; xxvi. 337, 667; Democrat. Rev., xiv. 495.

"Sir Richard Phillips had four valuable qualities: honesty, zeal, ability, and courage. He applied them all to teaching matters about which he knew nothing, and gained himself an uncomfortable life and a ridiculous memory."—Professor De Morgan.

Phillips, Richard, 1778–1851; President of the Chemical Society of London, and first Curator and Chemist of the Museum of Practical Geology; younger brother of William Phillips, the mineralogist, (infra;) gained great and merited distinction by his contributions to analytical chemistry. He was Lecturer on Chemistry at the London Hospital, at St. Thomas's Hospital, and at other institutions. From 1821 to 1827 he conducted (with the assistance of E. W. Brayley, Jun.) the Annals of Philosophy; from 1827 until his death was one of the editors of the Philosophical Magazine, (contributing papers to both of these periodicals;) wrote the principal articles on mineralogy and chemistry for the Penny Cyclopædia, and published the results of some of his scientific investigations in the Transactions of the Royal Society. See English Cyc., Biog., iv., 1857, 807–808; Lon. Gent. Mag., Aug. 1851, 208; Dr. Thomson's Hist. of Chemistry. In 1811 he pub. An Examination of the Last Edition of the Pharmacopœia Londinensis, with Remarks on Dr. Richard Powell's (q. v.) Translation and Annotations, Lon., 1809, 8vo; in 1816, Remarks on the Editio Altera of the Pharmacopœia Londinensis, and on Dr. Powell's Translation and Annotations, 1816, 8vo; and in 1824 he published his first Translation of the Pharmacopœia Londinensis, 8vo: the 5th ed., 8vo, was issued in the year of his death. The excellence of this work is well known. In 1846 he pub. Observations on the Edinburgh Pharmacopœia, 8vo.

"Of modern British analytical chemists undoubtedly the first is Mr. Richard Phillips, to whom we are indebted for not a few analyses conducted with great chemical skill and performed with great accuracy."—Thomson's Hist. of Chemistry.

"He might indeed be regarded during the latter part of his life as a connecting link between the chemists of the last generation and of the present."—Dr. Daubeny: Anniv. Address before the Chem. Soc., 1852.

Phillips, Samuel, 1690–1771, a native of Salem, Mass., graduated at Harvard College, 1708, was minister at Andover, Mass., from 1711 until his death. He pub. an Elegy, 1718, and a number of practical religious treatises and occasional sermons, 1727–67. See Sprague's Annals, Trin. Congreg., i., 1857, 273–275.

Phillips, Samuel, LL.D., Ph.D., 1815–1854, the son of a tradesman in Regent Street, London, after a short and successful experience on the stage as "Master Phillips, only fourteen years of age," was educated at the London University and the University of Göttingen; subsequently resided for a long interval at Sidney-Sussex College, Cambridge, with the design of taking holy orders; in conjunction with his brother, endeavoured unsuccessfully to revive the sinking business of his late father's Regent Street establishment; in 1841 adopted literature as a means of livelihood, and pub. his first work, Caleb Stukely, (repub. 1843, 3 vols. cr. 8vo; 1854, cr. 8vo; 1862, 12mo,) in Blackwood's Magazine; for two years (1845–46) wrote two leaders a week for the Morning Herald, and contributed to various provincial newspapers; from 1844 to 1854 contributed many biographical sketches and literary reviews to the London Times, selections from which, in two vols., entitled Essays from the Times, were pub. anonymously in 1852 and 1854, (in Murray's Reading for the Rail; repub., N. York, 2 vols. 18mo;) for about a year, 1845–46, proprietor and editor of the John Bull newspaper; from 1851 to 1854 contributed reviews and essays to the Lon. Literary Gazette; was one of the originators of the Crystal Palace Company, for some time its Secretary and Treasurer, and from 1852 to 1854 its Literary Director, and in this capacity wrote the General Guide to the Crystal Palace and Park, and the Portrait-Gallery of the Crystal Palace. One of his best-known tales in Blackwood, The Banking-House, was pub. in a vol., Phila., 1855, 8vo. Biographical notices of Dr. Phillips will be found in Lon. Lit. Gaz., Oct. 21, 1854, 906, (copied in the Bost. Liv. Age, Jan. 13, 1855, 126–128;) Lon. Gent. Mag., Dec. 1854, 635–636; London Times; Bost. Liv. Age, Dec. 30, 1854, 592–597. The Times says,

"The annals of English literature are certainly graced with the names of men of loftier genius than that of this gentleman, but upon the list there stands not the name of a more honourable and upright man."

Phillips, Thomas, 1770–1845, a native of Dudley, Warwickshire, an eminent portrait-painter, in 1824 succeeded Fuseli in the professorship of painting at the Royal Academy, and retained this office until 1832. He delivered ten Lectures, which were published in an 8vo vol. in 1833, under the title of Lectures on Painting: its History and Principles; 3d ed., with 10 col'd plates, 1838, ob. 4to.

"Phillips has much of the sensibility of Fuseli, without his ambitious flights; he has all the practical knowledge of Opie, with a truer, a finer, relish for the lovely and the beautiful; and there is evidence enough before us that his sympathies in Art have, if not a higher, a wider range than those of Reynolds."—Allan Cunningham: Lon. Athen., 1833, 745.

Also highly commended in Lon. Month. Rev., Dec. 1834, 493–505.

"There is not a passage in them with which a liberally educated English gentleman should not be acquainted."—Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1833, 726.

See, also, 742, 761; and read in Lit. Gaz. the reviews of these Lectures as they were delivered from year to year. Mr. Phillips also wrote many occasional essays on the fine arts, particularly those in Rees's Cyclopædia, and collected some materials for the Lives of the British Painters,—a work never completed. He was one of the founders of the Artists' General Benevolent Institute. See Lon. Athen., 1832, 80, (Living Artists, No. 12,) and Lon. Gent. Mag., June, 1845, 654–657, (Obituary,) for a notice of Mr. Phillips's paintings.

Phillips, Willard, b. Dec. 19, 1784, at East Bridgewater, co. of Plymouth, Mass.; graduated at Harvard College, 1810; was subsequently engaged for one year as assistant in a private academy in Boston; Tutor at Harvard College,—first in Latin and afterwards in Arithmetic and Natural Philosophy,—1811–15; studied law with William Sullivan; was admitted to the bar, and rose to eminence in his profession. In addition to the discharge of his duties as Judge of Probate of Suffolk county, Mr. Phillips was employed for a number of years, (1837–41, &c.,) under a legislative commission to himself and others, in reducing the law of crimes and punishments to a systematic code. The result of these labours was reported by Mr. Phillips and Mr. Samuel B. Walcot to the Legislature of Massachusetts, but has not been adopted by that body. The work, however, has had a material influence on legislation and the administration of the criminal law. In 1812 Mr. Phillips was a contributor to the General Repository and Review, (see Paine, Robert Treat,) had the oversight of the North American Review (Mr. Tudor continuing his editorial labours) during the second year of its existence, and was one of the North American Club, under whose charge it fell in 1817; contributed to the pages of this periodical from its commencement until the year 1834; for some years published and edited the American Jurist; during the war of 1812–14 pub. an Appeal to the Public Spirit of the Federalists and the Good Sense of the Democrats,—designed to promote the war spirit in New England; pub. in 1833, Boston, 8vo, A Treatise on Averages and Adjustments of Losses in Marine Insurance; with Notes made up from the works of Stevens and Benecke; in conjunction with Edward Pickering, edited, in 1834–39, 1st and 2d Amer. edits. of Collyer on the Law of Partnership, (see p. 414, ante,) and the first eight vols. of Pickering's Reports, 1824, &c. Mr. Phillips's separate publications are the following: 1. A Treatise on the Law of Insurance, Bost., 1823, 8vo, pp. 550. Published at the author's risk, as no publisher could be found bold enough to undertake the enterprise. The sale, however, was large. Supplemental vol., 1834, 8vo. 2d ed. of the whole work, 1840, 8vo; 3d ed., 1853, 2 vols. 8vo, pp. 1536; 4th ed., 1854, 2 vols. 8vo; 5th ed., N. York, 1868, 2 vols. 8vo. The 1st ed. of this excellent work was reviewed in the North American Review for Jan. 1825, 47–76, by Judge Story; repub. (Growth of the Commercial Law) in Story's Miscellaneous Works, 1852, 262–294.

"Mr. Phillips," remarks the reviewer, (N. A. Rev., xx. 73,) "has done a most acceptable service to the profession by the publication."

Chief-Justice Parker declared that he had found it more easy to get at all he wanted, upon every branch of the Law of Insurance, from this work than from any other on the same subject which he had been used to consult. Chancellor Kent characterizes it as a

"work of much labour, discrimination, and judgment; and of indispensable utility to the profession in this country."—3 Com., 431, 8th ed., 1854. See, also, 5th ed., iii., 317, 351.

Blackwood's Magazine in the year after the publication of the 1st edit. (vol. i., 1823) calls for its republication in England:

"It is a desideratum in English law. It is wanted here. It contains the essence of all that has been written on the subject. Principles are extracted, and authorities examined, with a precision worthy of Mr. Chitty himself."—Dec. 1824, 636: A Summary View of America, (by John Neal:) see Atlantic Month., Nov. 1865.

"A good writer, and a sound excellent lawyer," again exclaims John Neal, in the same periodical for Feb. 1825. "His work upon the Law of Insurance cannot be too highly praised."—American Writers, No. V., 199.

Mr. Francis Bowen, however, (N. Amer. Rev., lxxii. 396–442,) takes exceptions to some of the author's positions. Pickering, Charles, M.D., b. Nov. 10, 1805, on the North Branch of the Susquehanna, in Penna., a grandson of Col. Timothy Pickering of the Revolution, and nephew of John and Octavius Pickering, (all of whom appear in this Dictionary,) was educated at Harvard University, and graduated M.D. at Boston Medical College, after which he removed to Philadelphia. A year or two later he contributed to Trans. Amer. Phil. Soc., vol. iii., N. S., a paper on the Geographical Distribution of Plants, a subject which he has since pursued with great zeal and eminent success. For eleven years he was an active member of the Acad. of Natural Sciences of Phila.,—still engaged in the practice of medicine,—and at the expiration of this period was appointed a member of the Scientific Corps of the U.S. Exploring Expedition. This Expedition returned leaving certain countries that required to be visited to complete the survey of the globe. Accordingly, after remaining a little over a year at Washington, he set out alone in 1843 for Malta, Egypt, down the Red Sea to Zanzibar in East Africa, and thence to Bombay, returning after an absence of twenty-two months. He then prepared and published his work entitled The Races of Man and their Geographical Distribution, forming vol. ix. of the U.S. Exploring Expedition, Bost., 1848, 4to, pp. vii., 447, and 12; illustrated. It has also been republished in London in Bohn's Illustrated Library, edited by John Henry Hall, M.D., 1850, sq. 12mo. While finishing this work, he "made a discovery in Chronology"—we quote Mr. Pickering's words—"in regard to the length and the successive eras of the ending of the 'Great Year;' the Period of Time counted by a calendar year of 365 days. The Egyptians adhered to such a calendar for some 4000 years, and the result is: that the date of every event in Egyptian history has been preserved, and can be recovered; that the date of every event mentioned in the Bible, up to and beyond the days of Abraham, can be equally recovered by means of the Egyptian Great Year; and the same holds true in regard to the earlier events of Greek and Roman history. The announcement and explanation of this discovery were given as 'Chronological Observations,'—the first portion of a supplementary improved Chapter of the Races of Man."

This supplementary chapter,—The Geographical Distribution of Animals and Man,—forming the 15th vol. of the U.S. Exploring Expedition, was pub., Boston, 1854, 4to, pp. 214. Of the Chronological Observations the Westminster Review remarks,

"The proper execution of such a work implies not only great knowledge of natural history, but very extensive erudition,—qualities of whose combination abundant evidence will be found in Dr. Pickering's very valuable essay. We look forward with anxiety to the more general work which it heralds."—July, 1854.

Another English writer styles Pickering's Races of Man

"The best account of the Malay, Mongolian, Papuan, Negrillo, Negro, Telingan, Ethiopian, Abyssinian, and Arabian races, hitherto published, with valuable Essays on the Migrations by Sea, the Natural History of Polynesia, India, Egypt, &c."

In 1858 Dr. Pickering communicated to the American Oriental Society an essay on the Invention of the Art of Writing, and in the same year read some notes (since printed) before the Boston Natural Society on The Stinging Power of the Physalia. Dr. Pickering meditates a most important work,—nothing less than "an intelligible account of the Human Family from its earliest traces, downwards in the grand procession of mortality to the present day;" and this, we trust, will not be long withheld from the world.

Pickering, George, and Bedingfield, Thomas. Poems, Newc., 1815, 8vo.

Pickering, Henry, 1781–1838, third son of Col. Timothy Pickering of the Revolution, and a native of Newburg, New York, was for some time a merchant in Salem, Mass., and subsequently removed to the city of New York, in which place, and in various portions of the State, he resided until his decease. He was the author of a number of poetical compositions, specimens of which will be found in Duyckincks' Cyc. of Amer. Lit., ii. 26.

Pickering, John, LL.D., 1772–1846, a son of Col. Timothy Pickering of the Revolution, and a native of Salem, Mass., graduated at Harvard University in 1796; Secretary of Legation to Portugal, 1797; private Secretary to Rufus King, U.S. Minister at London, 1799–1801; returned to Salem, 1801, and subsequently commenced the practice of the law, in which he continued at this place until 1829, when he removed to Boston, where he was appointed City Solicitor, and held the office till within a short time of his death. In 1806 he was elected Hancock Professor of Hebrew and other Oriental Languages in Harvard University, and at a later day was invited to fill the chair of Greek Literature in the same institution: both these positions he declined. He was thrice Representative from Salem, twice a Senator from Essex, once a Senator from Suffolk, once a member of the Executive Council, and in 1833 a member of the Commission (in which he did good service) for revising and arranging the Statutes of Massachusetts. His best-known publications are the following: 1. A Vocabulary, or Collection of Words and Phrases which have been supposed to be Peculiar to the United States of America, &c., Bost., 1816, 8vo, pp. 355. This work (containing 520 words) is an enlarged edition of a paper contributed to the Memoirs of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, 1815.

"I wish Mr. Pickering would make a radical lexicon. It would do more than any thing else, in the present state of the matter, to promote the study of Greek among us."—Thomas Jefferson: Conversation with Daniel Webster, Dec. 1824: Webster's Private Correspondence, i. 373.

This is a work of the highest value. We have before us commendations of it by Drs. Edward Robinson, Peter Bullions, S. H. Taylor, (in Bibliotheca Sacra, iv. 196,) Prof. J. J. Owen, Prof. Felton, (in the Christian Examiner, xlii. 137,) and by many other authorities. See notices in N. Amer. Rev., li. 487, (by J. G. Palfrey, D.D.;) lxiv. 373, (by F. A. Adams.) See, also, Dr. Pickering's essay on the Pronunciation of the Greek Language, in Mem. A. A. S., vol. iv.; Moore, Nathaniel F., LL.D., No. 1. Immediately on the publication of the 1st ed. of Pickering's Lexicon (based upon that of Schrevelius) it was repub. in Edinburgh, by E. H. Barker and Prof. George Dunbar, with additions and corrections. In the 1st Edin. ed. credit was given to the American editor, but in the 2d ed. the acknowledgment was omitted, and it afterwards appeared with only the name of Prof. Dunbar. The work ran through several foreign edits., and the American publishers found it to their interest to import 500 copies to supply the demand for it at home. But the 3d ed. of Pickering's Lexicon is indeed a new work, having been enlarged from 900 pp. to 1456 pp., and embodying the results of Dr. P.'s late extensive researches in classical and Oriental literature. Dr. Pickering also pub. An Oration on July 4, Salem, 1804, 8vo; Eulogy on Nathaniel Bowditch before the Academy of Arts and Sciences, Bost., 1838, 8vo, (see N. Amer. Rev., xlviii. 144, 177, by B. Peirce, and Edward Everett's Orations and Speeches, 1850, ii. 263;) Lect. on the Alleged Uncertainty of the Law, 1834, 8vo, pub., with valuable notes, in the Memoirs of the American Acad. of Arts and Sciences; Dr. Edwards's Observations on the Language of the Muhhekaneew Indians, (pub. separately, Bost., 1823, 8vo;) Eliot's Indian Grammar, (pub. separately, Bost., 1822, 8vo,—see Eliot, John;) Father Rasles's Dictionary of the Abnaki Language; and the Vocabulary of Josiah Cotton; and constructed a Grammar of the Cherokee Language, (see E. Everett's Orations and Speeches, ii. 118, 139, 257; N. Amer. Rev., xxii. 93, n., 94, n.;) edited, with a memoir, Peirce's Hist. of Harvard University, (see Peirce, Benjamin, supra;) in conjunction with Judge White, of Salem, pub. an ed. of Sallust, with Latin Notes, 1805; the trans. of M. Dupin's Refutation of J. Salvador's Trial, &c. of Jesus, prefixed to the Examination of the Testimony of the Four Evangelists, &c., last ed., Oct. 1867, 18mo, (see, also, Greenleaf, Simon, LL.D., No. 4;) pub. a Review of the McLeod International Question; Remarks on Greek Grammars, from Amer. Jour. of Education, 1825, Bost., 1826, 8vo; and an Address before the American Oriental Society; in the American Jurist, reviews of Williams on the Law of Executors and Curtis's Admiralty Digest, and a paper on the Study of Roman Law; in the Law Reporter, 1841, an article on National Rights; an essay on the Agrarian Laws in Encyc. Americana; ten papers in the North Amer. Review, among which are: Trans. of Wyttenbach on Classical Education, x. 192–206, 412–426, (repub. with Preface: see Quincy's Hist. of Boston Athenæum, 43–44;) On the Pronunciation of the Greek, x. 272–290; On the Priority of Greek Studies, xi. 209–218; Du Ponceau on the Chinese System of Writing, xlviii. 271–310; Egyptian Jurisprudence: Conveyancing, li. 308–315; The Cochin-Chinese Language, lii. 404–423; and papers in Memoirs Amer. Acad. of Arts and Sci., Collec. Mass. Hist. Soc., Amer. Quar. Rev., and N. York Review, (on Prescott's Ferd. and Isabella, April, 1838, 308.)

Dr. Pickering was a man of profound learning in many branches of knowledge, and in the department of linguistics has been surpassed by very few in any age. As a zealous Hellenist, he was constantly adding to his acquisitions from the year 1814 until his death.

"In addition to his accurate knowledge of the Greek, Mr. Pickering had a more or less extensive acquaintance with at least twenty other languages."—S. H. TAYLOR, D.D.: Bibl. Sacra, iv. 196.

Pierpont, John, great-grandson of the preceding; b. April 6th, 1785, at Litchfield, Conn.; graduated at Yale College, 1804; tutor in the family of Col. William Allston, of South Carolina, 1805–9; commenced the practice of the law at Newburyport, 1812; was for some time a merchant in Boston, and subsequently in Baltimore; in 1816 entered the theological school of Harvard University, and in 1819 was ordained pastor of the Hollis Street Church, where he remained for nineteen years, when a difference of opinion with some members of the congregation resulted in his resignation. He resided at Boston until 1845, when he was called to the Unitarian Church in Troy, New York, and in 1849 he accepted the pastoral charge of a church at Medford, Mass. In 1835–36 he travelled over portions of Europe and Asia. 1. "It has delighted us in the perusal, and we shall often turn to it with pleasure as its splendid images grow dim in our mind. . . . The principal defects of the poem are those of taste; the author seldom fails from weakness, though he often errs in judgment. He has much splendour of imagery, yet we think he often pursues a figure too far. His epithets are occasionally misapplied; . . . his alliteration passes the bounds of good taste and authority."—F. DEXTER: N. Amer. Rev., March, 1817, 408–420.

Mr. Pierpont was a contributor to Goodrich's Token, and is the author of "E Pluribus Unum," in National Hymns, ed. by R. G. White, N. York, 1861. He has pub. upwards of twenty occasional sermons and discourses. Among the best-known of these are Serm. on the Death of the Rev. Dr. Holley, 1827; Serm. on Acts xix. 19, 20, (reviewed in Chris. Exam., xvi. 98;) Discourse on Morals of Political Action, (reviewed in Chris. Exam., xxvi. 218;) Serm. at Hollis Street Church, 1842. In July, 1857, Mr. Pierpont, then in his 73d year, read a poem before the literary societies of Union College, Schenectady. In 1861 he was Chaplain of the 22d Massachusetts Infantry, and subsequently accepted a clerkship in the Treasury Department at Washington, and was engaged at intervals between Nov. 1861, and March, 1864, in compiling in one volume a Digest of the Decisions and Instructions of the Treasury Department to Collectors of Customs, contained in fifty-four folio volumes.

"I regard this labour as a monument of talent and industry, and of inestimable value in conducting the correspondence of the department."—S. P. CHASE, (Secretary of the Treasury.)

The Hymns to the Gods, originally pub. in 1831, were repub., with additions, in Blackwood's Magazine (xlv. 819–830) for June, 1839. Professor Wilson appends to them a complimentary notice, declaring that "These fine Hymns entitle their author to take his place in the highest order of his country's poets."

"A series of Hymns to the Gods, after the manner of Keats, which have justly commanded favourable notice."—H. T. Tuckerman's Sketch of Amer. Lit., 1852.

"Here was also published the earnest poetry of Albert Pike, breathing the true spirit of old mythology."—Dr. R. S. Mackenzie: Hist. of Blackw. Mag., Noctes Ambros., 1852, lxvii.

The Ode to the Mocking-Bird, originally pub. in Philadelphia about 1836, was repub. in Blackwood's Mag. (xlvii. 354–355) for March, 1840. Ariel, another of Mr. Pike's best-known poems, appeared in a short-lived periodical, pub. in Boston, in 1834 or 1835. It was written in the prairie while the poet's horse was feeding by his side. About the same time (1835) he published an Indian romance, "illustrative of the habits of the Camanche and Navajo Indians, and of Mexican life at an early period of the incursions by the Spaniards." In 1859 he published The Statutes and Regulations, Institutes, Laws, and Grand Constitutions of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite; Compiled, with Notes, from Authentic Documents for the Use of the Order, [French and English,] by Albert Pike, 33rd M.P., Sovereign Grand Commander of the Supreme Council for the Southern Jurisdiction of the United States, N. York, 8vo, pp. 168.

Of his unpublished poems, the principal of which were written between 1831 and 1840, Los Tiempos is the longest. Of his minor poetical pieces which have found their way to the press, the best-known, after the Hymns to the Gods and the Ode to the Mocking-Bird, are Lines Written on the Rocky Mountains, To Spring, and To the Planet Jupiter. The death of Col. Albert James Pickett, (supra,) in Dec. 1858, led to a report of the demise of Col. Albert Pike, and the latter enjoyed the rare felicity—an advance of good fortune beyond even the "happy opportunity of death" coveted by the ancients—of perusing glowing epicedian tributes to his own "departed worth." In the next month the appearance at Washington City in life and health of the "deeply lamented" was celebrated by a social festival, the incidents of which have been duly recorded in an exquisite volume (privately printed in August, 1859) entitled The Life-Wake of the Fine Arkansas Gentleman who Died before his Time. To the above we have now to add that in Feb. 1867, Mr. Pike became editor of the Memphis Appeal, and left it in 1868.

Pinkerton, John, 1758–1826, a native of Edinburgh, was for six years a scholar at the Lanark Grammar-School, and subsequently served a five years' apprenticeship in the office of Mr. Aytoun, a writer to the Signet. He pub. in 1776 an Ode to Craigmillar Castle, and on the death of his father, in 1780, came to London and commenced author by profession. From 1802 to 1805 he resided in Paris, spent in that city, often in narrow circumstances, the principal part of his later years, and was there "gathered to his fathers." He was a man of considerable learning, more pedantry, great pretension, and little patience under opposition. His publications appeared as follows: 1. Rimes, Lon., 1781, 8vo; 2d ed., 1782, 8vo.

"There is great poetic beauty and merit in them, with great knowledge of the ancient masters and of the best of the modern."—Horace Walpole to Pinkerton, Aug. 24, 1784.

2. Scottish Tragic Ballads, 1781, 8vo; 2d ed., with a second part, containing Ballads of the Comic Kind, the whole being included under the title of Select Scottish Ballads, 1783, 2 vols. 8vo. Several of these were the productions of Pinkerton's own pen: see his confession in his Ancient Scotish Poems, No. 7, post. See, also, Sir W. Scott's Introduc. Remarks on Popular English Poetry, prefixed to his Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border; Lon. Quar. Rev., xli. 133, (by Sir W. Scott;) Lon. Gent. Mag., Nov. 1784; Nichols's Lit. Illust., viii. 1858, 103–108; Southey's Life and Corresp., chap. viii. 3. Tales in Verse, 1782, 4to. 4. Two Dithyrambic Odes on Enthusiasm and Laughter, 1782, 4to. 5. Illust., viii. 1858, 99, 108–112; Lon. Athen., 1860, i. 516. The critical canons and orthographical innovations of these Letters, it will be seen, elicited vigorous protests.

"That monster Pinkerton proposed a revolution which would have left us nothing to spell."—DE QUINCEY: see Lon. Reader, 1864, i. 371, (Notes on some English Heterographers, by Henry B. Wheatley.)

The author himself subsequently characterizes it as "a book written in early youth, and contained many juvenile crude ideas long since abandoned by its author."—Walpoliana, 78.

The book, however, introduced Pinkerton to Horace Walpole, (see his Letters, ed. 1861,) Gibbon, and other men of letters and fashion. 6. An Essay on Medals, 1784, 8vo, anon.; 1789, 2 vols. 8vo; 3d ed., enlarged, &c., 1808, 2 vols. 8vo. The author was assisted by Mr. Douce and Mr. Southgate, both of the British Museum. The 3d ed. (edited by Mr. Harwood) was criticised by Barré Charles Roberts, (the article was repub. in his Letters, &c., 1814, r. 4to,) in Lon. Quar. Rev., i. 112.

"This work, though deformed by the dogmatism and self-conceit of the author, is one of the most useful publications on the subject of which it treats."—McCulloch's Lit. of Polit. Econ., 1845, 165.

"My admiration of your essay on medals was natural, uninvited, and certainly unaffected."—Horace Walpole to Pinkerton, Sept. 27, 1784; Walpole's Letters, ed. 1861, viii. 504.

See, also, Lon. Gent. Mag., 1784, 521; 1789, 837. 7. Ancient Scotish Poems, never before in print, but now pub. from the MSS. Collections of Sir Richard Maitland, 1786, 2 vols. 8vo; 1792, 3 vols. 8vo. It is common to represent these poems as forgeries of Pinkerton; but it is asserted on recent authority that they are all genuine. See MAITLAND, SIR RICHARD; Lon. Gent. Mag., Feb. 1786, 147–150; Nichols's Lit. Illust., viii. 113, 119–122. 8. The Treasury of Wit. See BENNET, H. 9. A Dissertation on the Origin and Progress of the Scythians or Goths, 1787, 8vo. The author's imitation in this work of the style of his friend Gibbon is not thought peculiarly happy. See an Answer to an Attack made by John Pinkerton in his History of Scotland, &c., by Wm. Anderson, Edin., 1797, 8vo. 17. Walpoliana, Lon., (1799,) 2 vols. 12mo; 2d ed., (1804,) 2 vols. 12mo; 1819, 12mo. These reminiscences of the conversation of the Earl of Orford were originally pub. in the Monthly Magazine. To the collection Pinkerton prefixed a memoir of Walpole. 18. The Scottish Gallery; or, Portraits of Eminent Persons of Scotland, &c., with Brief Accounts of the Characters, Lon., 1799, r. 8vo. 19. Modern Geography, &c., digested on a New Plan, 1802, 2 vols. 4to; (Abridged, 1802, 8vo; 1806, 8vo. See, also, WILLIAMS, JOHN;) Phila., 1804, 2 vols. 8vo; 2d ed., enlarged, Lon., 1807, 3 vols. 4to; 1811, 3 vols. 4to; 1817, 2 vols. 4to. A valuable Catalogue of Maps, Charts, and Books of Travels and Voyages, in all languages, is appended to the work. This book is by no means free from errors, but on the whole it does the author great credit. Major Rennell called it "the best we have;" Southey, in early life one of the most careful of book-buyers, purchased it in 1804, (see his Life and Corresp., chap. x.;) and as late as 1819 an eminent authority characterizes it as "far superior, in accuracy and extent of information, to any hitherto published in the English language."—Blackw. Mag., Dec. 1819, 341.

"Mr. P. has presented us with a production, which we need not be ashamed to own as of British growth, which is not a mere bookseller's job, but is the fruit of the persevering study of a man of letters, and has been conducted on the principles and for the advancement of science."—Lon. Month. Rev.

On the other hand, the London Quarterly Review calls Pinkerton "a mere dabbler in geography," and many pages of the Edinburgh Review (Oct. 1803, 76–80, April, 1807, 154–171) are occupied with notices of errors in the 1st and 2d editions. The last-named periodical, however, (April, 1803, 67–76,) finds much to commend in Mr. Pinkerton's performance. We may here properly state that the last English ed. of Malte-Brun and Balbi's System of Universal Geography was pub. by H. G. Bohn, Lon., 1859, 8vo, pp. 1071, 15*s.* It has an index of 13,500 names. (See PERCIVAL, JAMES GATES, M.D.) 20. Recollections of Paris in the Years 1802–03–04–05, 2 vols. 8vo, 1806.

"We have long known Mr. Pinkerton as a laborious polemical antiquary, and a diligent compiler of antiquarian history in a most absurd and detestable style. We expected something interesting, however, from the Parisian recollections of a man so learned and industrious. . . . Upon the whole, we have seldom met with a more unsatisfactory or fatiguing performance than this."—Lord Jeffrey: July, 1806, 413–421.

21. A General Collection of Voyages and Travels, 1808–14, 17 vols. 4to, 197 plates, £37 16*s*.; Phila., 1810–12, 6 vols. 4to.

"All the travels, worthy of preservation, contained in the former large collections of Churchill, Green, Harris, and the Harleian, are here reprinted. Many volumes of high price, such as Pococke's and Shawe's Travels, are given almost entire. Translations and extracts of many important travels, not before known in the English language, are likewise intermingled; besides several small treatises, objects of research among the curious, and exceedingly scarce. In this point of view, it is believed that the purchaser of this work could not procure the same collection in the originals for three or four hundred pounds, and some of them, probably, not at any price."—Preface.

"The most valuable collection of voyages extant. . . . The 17th vol. contains a copious Catalogue of Books on Voyages and Travels, and an excellent Index."—Dibdin's Lib. Comp., 1825, 401.

Many of our readers no doubt highly prize the following work: Prevost, Histoire Générale des Voyages, ou Nouvelle Collection de toutes les Relations de Voyages qui ont été publiées jusqu'à présent, ornées de gravures et de cartes, nouvelle édition, avec des additions considérables, par Dubois et autres, Amst., 1747–80, 25 vols. 4to.

"Mais c'est lorsque l'auteur arrive à l'Amérique qu'on prend une idée avantageuse des améliorations qu'il était capable de procurer à l'ensemble de l'ouvrage. Et c'est cette partie qui justifie surtout le complément que la Duchesse d'Aiguillon fait à l'auteur: vous pourriez faire mieux; mais personne ne pourrait faire aussi bien."

22. New Modern Atlas, 1809–15, in Pts. 23. Petralogy: a Treatise on Rocks, 1811, 2 vols. 8vo. Pinkerton enjoyed the acquaintance, in Paris, of the eminent geologists Haüy, Werner, Patrin, Gillet-Laumont, and Daubuisson, and conversed with them on the subject of this Treatise. It was condemned by Edin. Rev., xxiii. 63. Pinkerton also composed one or two tragedies, never published, contributed to the Gentleman's Magazine, and was for a short time editor of the Critical Review. See, also, Ritson, Joseph, No. 38. After our author's death appeared,—24. The Literary Correspondence of John Pinkerton, Esq., now first printed from the Originals: Edited and Illustrated with Notes by Dawson Turner, Esq., F.R.S., 1830, 2 vols. 8vo.

"A work not only valuable from the character of its information, but also of those whose opinions it unfolds. There is a great quantity of curious intelligence sprinkled over almost every page in the volumes."—Lon. Lit. Gaz.

See, also, Lon. Gent. Mag., 1839, i. 368.

"We cannot conceive in what manner the publication of several of the letters in these volumes is calculated to reflect honour upon Pinkerton's memory."—Lon. Month. Rev., Jan. 1831, 62–79, q. v. for notice of several of Pinkerton's works.

At the sale of Dawson Turner's Autographs, June 6–10, 1859, No. 385, The Pinkerton Correspondence, 700 original letters, bound in 4 vols., brought £32.

A general survey of his literary character, based upon a critical estimate of Nos. 5, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11, and 13, (supra,) by no less a person than Edward Gibbon, will be found in An Address in which the latter suggested Pinkerton as a suitable editor for the projected Scriptores Rerum Britannicarum, or the Scriptores Rerum Anglicarum: see Gibbon's Miscellaneous Works, ed. 1837, 834–842. It will be remembered that the great literary enterprise which Gibbon fondly designed, Henry Petrie (ante) commenced,—and, alas! only commenced. Gibbon perhaps erred in his estimate of his friend's fitness for the proposed task:

"His recent publications," exclaims the historian, "a Treatise on Medals, and the edition of the early Scotch poets, discover a mind replete with a variety of knowledge, and inclined to every liberal pursuit; but his decided propensity, such a propensity as made Bentley a critic and Rennell a geographer, attracts him to the study of the history and antiquities of Great Britain, and he is well qualified for this study, by a spirit of criticism, acute, discerning, and suspicious."—Ubi supra, 840.

But what confidence would the Celts have reposed in the editorial labours of the author of the Dissertation on the Scythians? Pinkerton, indeed, as his Correspondence and his whole literary history abundantly prove, had been at little pains to secure the friendship of his literary brethren:

"The pugnacious John Pinkerton. He was a man of an eager, acute, tenacious temper; a devourer of learning—a very helluo librorum. . . He entertained or affected great respect for, and acquaintance with, the works of foreign literati; and, assuming an enthusiasm for their learning, indulged his own arrogance by employing their uncivil language, and translating the classical vituperation of menteris, impudentissime, into the St. Giles's dialect of 'you lie, scoundrel.' . . His studious and laborious disposition deserves praise; and the defects we have had to notice with pain, arose in youth from the arrogance of inexperience, and in his latter years from mortification at the failure of a long series of literary attempts—some of which merited another fate."—Sir Walter Scott: Lon. Quar. Rev., July, 1829, 131, 135.

"A man of considerable learning and some severity as well as acuteness of disposition."—Sir Walter Scott: Introduc. Remarks prefixed to the Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border.

Pinkney, Edward Coate, 1802–1828, the son of William Pinkney, an American statesman, (post,) was b. in London whilst his father was ambassador at the Court of St. James, entered St. Mary's College, soon after the return of the family to Baltimore, in 1811, and remained in that institution until 1816, when he was appointed a Midshipman in the U.S. Navy. In 1824 he was admitted a member of the Maryland Bar, at which he had little opportunity to practise; in 1826 he was appointed one of the professors in the University of Maryland; near the close of 1827 assumed the editorial charge of The Marylander, pub. at Baltimore, and died the ensuing April, in his 26th year. In 1825 he pub. a vol. of Poems, Baltimore, 12mo, pp. 76, containing Rodolph, a Fragment, (which had been previously printed separately for the author's friends, but without his name,) and a number of minor poems, some of which—Italy, The Indian's Bride, A Picture Song, Serenade, A Health, &c.—have been warmly eulogized. A second edit. of his Poems was published at Baltimore in 1838, and they were again pub., with an Introduction by Mr. N. P. Willis, in the series of the Mirror Library entitled The Rococo. A biographical notice of the author, by William Leggett, was pub. in the New York Mirror in 1827; a review of the first edit. of his Poems, by F. W. P. Greenwood, appeared in the North American Review, xxi. 369–376; and another in the U.S. Literary Gazette, iii. 328; and favourable notices of his minor publications will be found in Poe's Literati, 518; Lon. Pinkney, William, 1764–1822, a native of Annapolis, Maryland; was admitted to the Maryland Bar, 1786; Commissioner to Great Britain, with Messrs. Gore and Trumbull, 1796–1804; minister to England, 1806–11; Attorney-General of the U. States, 1811–14; member of the H. of Representatives of U. States, 1815; minister to Russia and to Naples, 1816; returned home, 1818, and elected a Senator of the U. States, 1820. Mr. Pinkney was greatly distinguished for his professional learning, forensic oratory, and remarkable command of forcible and appropriate language. He was certainly second to no one at the Bar of the United States; and in 1816, when he offered to resign his business to Mr. Justice Story, (see Story's Life and Letters, i. 278,) his profits amounted to $21,000 per annum. "One of the proudest names in the annals of the American Bar. . . . His language is most elegant, correct, select, and impressive; his delivery fluent and continuous; his precision the most exact and forcible that you can imagine. . . . He possesses beyond any man I ever saw the power of elegant and illustrative amplification. . . . His style was ornate in the highest degree. . . . Indeed, Chief-Justice Marshall said of Mr. Pinkney that he never knew his equal as a reasoner,—so clear and luminous was his method of argumentation. Judge Marshall then forgot himself, for I should make the same observation of him. . . . One who, while abroad, honoured his country by an unequalled display of diplomatic science, and on his return illumined the halls of justice with an eloquence of argument and depth of learned research that have not been exceeded in our own age."—JUDGE JOSEPH STORY: Story's Life and Letters, i. 217, 296, 325, 567; ii. 493, 494.

Pintard, John, 1759–1844, a native of the city of New York, graduated at Princeton College, 1775; entered upon the study of the law, but never practised; during the Revolution joined a company commanded by a professor of the college; acted for three years as clerk to his uncle, Lewis Pintard, Commissary for American prisoners in New York; officiated a short time as editor of the New York Daily Advertiser, and subsequently engaged in commerce; was long City Inspector of New York, and for many years, and until the time of his death, acted as Secretary to the old Mutual Insurance Company in the same city. He was the founder of the Historical Society of New York, and the zealous promoter of other useful institutions; an intelligent antiquary, and author of a number of papers in periodicals. Among the best-known of his productions are an account of the city of New Orleans, pub. in the N. York Medical Repository, and (if indeed truly attributed to him) a notice of Philip Freneau in the N. York Mirror, June 12, 1833. A life of Mr. Pintard (we hope that a selection from his writings will be included) is meditated by some of his family; and we trust that the project will not (like many of the kind) fall to the ground. Interesting notices of this scholar and philanthropist, by his intimate friend of many years, John W. Francis, M.D., will be found in Francis's Old New York, 2d ed., 1858, 53–58, 140, 382. See, also, Semi-Centennial Celebration of the N. York Hist. Soc., Oct. 1854; Trübner's Bibl. Guide to Amer. Lit., 1859, cix., cxi.; Hist. Mag., 1860, 367; PAINE, THOMAS.

"Until the career of our founder [of the Hist. Soc. of N. York] commenced, there was little antiquarian zeal among us. . . . Piozzi, Mrs. Hester Lynch, Jan. 16, 1740–May 2, 1821, a native of Bodvel, Caernarvonshire, celebrated in her youth as "the beautiful Miss Salusbury," was married in 1763 to Henry Thrale, M.P., brewer; in 1764 made the acquaintance of Dr. Johnson, who from 1766 until 1781, when Mr. Thrale died, was an inmate of her family both at Southwark and at Streatham; in 1784 was married to Signor Gabriel Piozzi, a native of Florence, and a music-master of the city of Bath; in 1785, during her residence at Florence, contributed under the signature of Anna Matilda to the Florence Miscellany, Florence, 1785, 8vo, privately printed, and wrote the Preface to and edited the volume, (see GIFFORD, WILLIAM; GREATHEED, BERTIE;) returned to England, and for twenty years resided happily with her second husband at her ancestral residence of Brynbella, in the vale of Clwydd, which she left (passing over her own children by Mr. Thrale) to Sir John S. Piozzi Salusbury, an Italian nephew of Signor Piozzi, adopted by the lady and graced by her with her maiden name. A notice of this gentleman, who d. in 1858, will be found in Lon. Gent. Mag., Feb. 1859, 208. Mrs. Thrale's eldest daughter, Viscountess Keith, (Johnson's Queeny,) d. 1857, in her 95th year, and her sister, Susanna Thrale, the third daughter, d. 1858, in her 90th year. Mrs. Piozzi first acquired literary reputation by some poetical pieces contributed to the vol. of Miscellanies in Prose and Verse pub. by Mrs. Anna Williams, 1766, 4to. Of these, The Three Warnings still maintains its place in Elegant Selections. See Dyce's Specimens of British Poetesses; Leigh Hunt's Men, Women, and Books, vol. ii.; T. Moore's Journal, &c., 1853, iv. 38. Later in life she published: 1. Anecdotes of the Late Samuel Johnson, LL.D., during the Last Twenty Years of his Life, Lon., 1786, sm. 8vo. It will be remembered that Boswell sneers at Hawkins's and Piozzi's anecdotes of Johnson; but Mr. Croker tells us,

"I am, after a close inquiry, satisfied of their authenticity and general accuracy."—Boswell's Johnson, ed. 1848, v. 8vo, 573, n. See, also, HAWKINS, SIR JOHN, p. 803.

"Two days ago appeared Madame Piozzi's 'Anecdotes of Dr. Johnson.' . . . This new book is wretched; a high-varnished preface to a heap of rubbish in a very vulgar style, and too void of method even for such a farrago."—*Horace Walpole to Sir H. Retrospection; or, A Review of the Most Striking and Important Events, Characters, Situations, and their Consequences, which the last 1800 Years have presented to the View of Mankind, 1801, 2 vols. 4to. Forgotten by the present generation—Lord Lansdowne excepted: see Moore's Journal, &c., 1853, iv. 38. See, also, p. 329. A few years since appeared a little vol. entitled Love Letters of Mrs. Piozzi, written when she was Eighty to the handsome Actor, William Augustus Conway, aged Twenty-Seven, 1843, 8vo. (Some of these are included in Love Letters of Eminent Persons, edited by Charles Martel, 1859, 12mo.) But this is a dishonest publication; in proof whereof, see Lon. Athen., 1859, i. 705, and 1862, i. 50, and ii. 169.

An edition of these Letters, illustrated with MS. letters of Mrs. Piozzi's and Conway's, portraits, plates, &c. was sold at sale of John Allan's library, No. 2322, 1864, for $37.50.

The mind of Pirie was too fertile; and though the reader will often be amused by his etymologies and analogies, he will as often be dissatisfied, and regret that his industry and talents were so much employed about trifles or things of a fanciful nature. He was capable of producing something more useful and permanent than any of his works are likely to be. Pits, or Pitseus, John, D.D., 1560–1616, a native of Alton, Hampshire; Probationer Fellow of New College, Oxford; subsequently studied at Douay, Rheims, and Rome, and was ordained priest at the latter place; Prof. of Rhetoric and Greek at Rheims for two years; afterwards Canon of Verdun; and for twelve years confessor to Antonia, Duchess of Cleves; Dean of Liverdun, Lorraine, and Canon and Official of the same church until his death. He was the author of the following Latin works: 1. De Legibus, Triers, 1592. 2. De Beatitudine, Ingolst., 1595. 3. De Peregrinatione, Dusseld., 1604. 4. The Lives of the Kings, Bishops, Apostolical Men, and Writers of England. Comprised in four large vols. The first three are preserved in the archives of the collegiate church of Verdun; the 4th only was pub., after his decease, Paris, 1619, 4to; again, 1623, 4to, under the title of J. Pitsei Angli, &c., Relationum Historicarum de Rebus Anglicis, tomus primus: but the running title is De Illustribus Angliæ Scriptoribus. It is divided into four parts. Part 4 consists of 15 Alphabetical Indexes,—a kind of epitome of the whole work.

"Though he quotes Leland with great familiarity and assurance, it is very probable he never saw any such thing as his Collectanea de Scriptoribus, but that his only true author, for all that he pretends to bring out of that store-house, was John Bale himself. His Latin is clean enough; and his giving an account of some eminent popish writers, that lived beyond sea in the beginning of the Reformation, is an acceptable piece of service. Mr. Wood has taken the pains to correct a great many of his mistakes, and might have noted some hundreds more."—Bp. Nicolson's Eng. Hist. Lib., ed. 1776, 131.

Pitt, Christopher, 1699–1748, educated at Winchester College and at New College, Oxford; was presented to the living of Pimpern, Dorsetshire, 1722, resigned his fellowship in 1724, and retired to Pimpern, where he passed the rest of his days in pastoral duties and literary pursuits. 1. Vida's Art of Poetry, trans. into English Verse, Lon., 1725, 12mo.

"Even the laborious production of Mr. Pitt, corrected by the erudite Wharton, is greatly inferior, both in spirit and elevation of style, to the excellent translation by Mr. Dryden."—G. D.: Life of Virgil prefixed to Dryden's translation of the Works of Virgil.

"Pitt, engaging as a rival with Dryden, naturally observed his failures, and avoided them; and as he wrote after Pope's Iliad, he had an example of an exact, equable, and splendid versification. With these advantages, seconded by great diligence, he might successfully labour particular passages, and escape many errors. If the two versions are compared, perhaps the result would be that Dryden leads the reader forward by his general vigour and sprightliness, and Pitt often stops him to contemplate the excellence of a single couplet—that Dryden's faults are forgotten in the hurry of delight, and that Pitt's beauties are neglected in the languor of a cold and listless perusal—that Pitt pleased the critics and Dryden the people—that Pitt is quoted and Dryden read. He did not long enjoy the reputation which this great work deservedly conferred; for he left the world in 1748."—DR. JOHNSON: ubi supra.

As early as 1719, Pitt presented to the electors of New College a complete translation of Lucan's Pharsalia, not aware, whilst engaged upon it, that Rowe had made a version. Rowe's was pub. in 1718, fol., &c.; Pitt's never saw the light. If the MS. should ever be discovered, it should be printed. See John Hughes's Corresp.; Pref. to Warton's Virgil; Nichols's Lit. Anec.

Pitt, Rt. Hon. William, Earl of Chatham. See CHATHAM.

Pitt, Rt. Hon. William, second son of the first Earl of Chatham, May 28th, 1759–Jan. 23d, 1806, a native of Hayes, Kent, was admitted to Pembroke Hall, Cambridge, 1773; after leaving college, travelled for some time on the Continent; on his return home entered himself of Lincoln's Inn, and was called to the Bar in 1780; returned to Parliament for the borough of Appleby in 1781, and by his first speech gained an influence in public affairs, which steadily and rapidly increased, until he became, as his father had been in his day, the most powerful statesman of the time. In the many histories of that time must the events of Pitt's life be sought. We indicate, for the convenience of the reader, the following sources of information: 1. History of the Polit. Life of Pitt, by John Gifford, 1809, 3 vols. 4to; 2d ed., 1809, 3 vols. 8vo. Reviewed by Sir Robert Grant (not by J. H. Frere, as often alleged) in Lon. Quar. Rev., iv. 207–271. See, also, N. Amer. Rev., xiv. 146, (by Theo. Lyman, Jr.;) GIFFORD, JOHN. 2. Memoirs of the Life of Pitt, by George Tomline, D.D., 1821, 2 vols. 4to; 2d ed., 1821, 3 vols. 8vo; Phila., 1821, 2 vols. 8vo. This contains only the public life of Mr. Pitt, and that brought down no later than 1793; the author, who died in 1827, promised a continuation to include Pitt's private life, but it never appeared.

"Such was the man whose life has now been written by a person enjoying, in a singular degree, access to full information, and who, we will venture to assert, has disappointed the expectations of the public by the performance of the task as signally as his opportunities were calculated to raise them."—LORD BROUGHAM: Edin. Rev., xxxv. 437–467. Partially repub. in his lordship's Contrib. to Edin. Rev., 1856, 407–430.

"The preceptor showed his gratitude by writing a Life of the disciple which enjoys the distinction of being the worst biographical work of its size in the world."—LORD MACAULAY: Life of Pitt, (infra.)

3. Life of Pitt, Phila., 1806, 18mo. Repub. from London ed. 4. Life of Pitt, in Encyc. Brit., 8th ed., vol. xvii., 1859, by Lord Macaulay. Repub. in Delisser and Procter's Household Lib., vol. vi., N. York, 1859; in Biographies of Lord Macaulay contributed to Encyc. Brit., Edin., 1860; and in his Essays.

"Every thing Macaulay writes is alive and to the point; but if he excels in one thing it is English biography—especially literary and political. No man brings to a focus the scattered rays of historical truth, to place in relief individual character, with such tact as he,—no one is so full in research, so fresh in exposition. We accordingly welcome every portrait from his pen as a vital reality. . . A masterly and condensed political biography, singularly interesting from the men and events here and in Europe with which Pitt's name is associated."—H. T. TUCKERMAN.

4. His Speeches in the House of Commons; compiled by W. S. Hathaway, 1806, 4 vols. 8vo; 3d ed., 1817, 3 vols. 8vo.

"Mackintosh said that Pitt's speeches are miserably reported. He was himself present at the speech on the Slave Trade in '92, (which Mr. Fox declared was the finest he had ever heard,) and the report, he says, gives no idea whatever of its merits."—Moore's Memoirs, &c., iv. 76.

"The two speeches and the only ones (I believe I may say it confidently, from my intimacy with him) which he [Mr. Pitt] himself corrected, were those on the Sinking Fund [1786] and on the answer to Bonaparte's Letter, [1800.] The first was a very indifferent speech."—LORD GRENVILLE: *Recollec. by S. Having thus copiously referred to the opposing verdicts of friends and enemies, of censurers and admirers, of this eminent statesman, we should not feel an obligation, even had we more confidence than we possess of our competency for the task, to record any estimate of our own of the political, ministerial, and oratorical abilities of William Pitt.

"His whole training from infancy was such as fitted him to bear a part in parliamentary government; and, from the prime of his manhood to his death, all the powers of his vigorous mind were almost constantly exerted in the work of parliamentary government. He accordingly became the greatest master of the whole art of parliamentary government that has ever existed: a greater than Montague or Walpole; a greater than his father Chatham, or his rival Fox; a greater than either of his illustrious successors, Canning and Peel."—LORD MACAULAY: Life of Pitt, in Encyc. Brit.

"He was perfectly accomplished in classical literature, both Latin and Greek. . . . Lord Grenville has often declared to me that Mr. Pitt was the best Greek scholar he ever conversed with. Mr. Pitt was also as complete a master of all English literature as he was undoubtedly of the English language."—MARQUESS WELLESLEY: Lon. Quar. Rev., lvii. 488, 489.

Considered merely as a member of the social circle,

"Mr. Gifford has justly remarked," says Sir Robert Grant, that "no man was ever more beloved by his friends, or inspired those who had the happiness of living in his society with a more sincere and affectionate attachment."—Lon. Quar. Rev., iv. 265: review of Gifford's Life of Pitt.

"Pitt was the wittiest man I ever knew, and, what was quite peculiar to himself, had at all times his wit under entire control."—WILBERFORCE: Life.

As regards his oratory, (we again quote Pitt's friend and admirer, Sir R. Grant,)

"Every part of his speaking, in sentiment, in language, and in delivery, evidently bore, in our judgment, the stamp of his character. All communicated to us a definite and vivid apprehension of the qualities of strenuousness without bustle, unlaboured intrepidity, and serene greatness."—Ubi supra, 268–269.

We select a few other opinions from the many before us:

"Mr. Pitt conceives his sentences before he utters them; Mr. Fox throws himself into the middle of his," &c.—R. PORSON: Recollec. by S. Rogers, 121.

"In his luminous and comprehensive speeches in Parliament Pitt has explained his motives and unfolded his views, his objects, and his designs."—Gifford's Life of Pitt.

"Pitt, tall and slender, had an air at once melancholy and sarcastic. His delivery was cold, his intonation monotonous, his action scarcely perceptible. At the same time, the lucidness and the fluency of his thoughts, the logic of his arguments, suddenly irradiated with flashes of eloquence, rendered his talent something above the ordinary line. . . . Ill dressed, without pleasure, without passion, greedy of power, he despised honours, and would not be any thing more than William Pitt."—VISCOUNT DE CHATEAUBRIAND: Sketches of Eng. Lit., ii. 277.

This quotation will naturally remind the reader of the many unfavourable comments on the same person by a still more eminent foreigner. Than his there is no better testimony of the position which his great enemy held in foreign courts:

"Pitt was the idol of the whole European Aristocracy."—NAPOLEON BONAPARTE.

"Windham most happily said that 'Pitt spoke in a state-paper style.' This is the style of India; and it must be owned that there cannot be a worse."—SIR J. MACKINTOSH: Life, chap. ii.

"His declamation was admirable, mingling with and clothing the argument, as to be good for any thing declamation always must; and no more separable from the reasoning than the heat is from the metal in a stream of lava. Yet, with all this excellence, the last effect of the highest eloquence was for the most part wanting: we seldom forgot the speaker, or lost the artist in the work."—LORD BROUGHAM: Statesm. of the Time of Geo. III., ed. 1855, i. 285.

In his graphic sketch of the imposing convocation of men of renown before whom Warren Hastings was impeached and tried for his long catalogue of crimes, Lord Macaulay remarks that Pitt's

"commanding, copious, and sonorous eloquence was wanting to that great muster of various talents."—Essays, iii. 182.

Again:

"The almost unanimous judgment of those who were in the habit of listening to that remarkable race of men, placed Pitt, as a speaker, above Burke, above Windham, above Sheridan, and not below Fox. His declamation was copious, polished, and splendid. In power of sarcasm he was probably not surpassed by any speaker, ancient and modern; and of this formidable weapon he made merciless use. In two parts of the oratorical art which are of the highest value to a minister of state he was singularly expert. No man knew better how to be luminous or how to be obscure."—Lord Macaulay's Life of Pitt, in Encyc. Brit.

For executive action in "troublous times" he was deemed less suited:

"The price at which he [the first Pitt] purchased faithful service and complete victory, though far smaller than that which his son, the most profuse and incapable of war ministers, paid for treachery, defeat, and shame, was long and severely felt by the nation."—Lord Macaulay: Edin. Rev., Jan. 1834, 542: Earl of Chatham.

"History," remarks his lordship, in his summary of Pitt's characteristics, "will vindicate the real man from calumny disguised under the semblance of adulation, and will exhibit him as what he was,—a minister of great talents, honest intentions, and liberal opinions, pre-eminently qualified, intellectually and morally, for the part of a parliamentary leader, and capable of administering with prudence and moderation the government of a prosperous and tranquil country, but unequal to surprising and terrible emergencies, and liable, in such emergencies, to err grievously, both on the side of weakness and on the side of violence."—*Life of Pitt, in Encyc. Playfair, James G., nephew of the succeeding, q. v.

Playfair, John, 1748–1819, a native of the parish of Benvie, Forfarshire, Scotland, and the eldest son of James Playfair, minister of Liff and Benvie, was educated at the University of St. Andrew's, where he so distinguished himself that at the age of eighteen he was a candidate for the professorship of Mathematics in Marischal College, Aberdeen: in 1772 was a competitor for the Chair of Natural Philosophy at St. Andrew's; in 1773 was inducted into the livings of Liff and Benvie, vacated by the death of his father, and discharged ministerial duties until 1782, when he became tutor to the sons of Mr. Ferguson of Raith. In 1785 he was selected his Assistant Professor (Playfair really discharged all the active duties) by Dr. Adam Ferguson, who succeeded Dugald Stewart in the chair of Mathematics in the University of Edinburgh; in 1805 succeeded Dr. Robison in the professorship of Natural Philosophy in the same institution, and retained this post until his death. In 1816–17 he passed eighteen months in a scientific tour through France, Switzerland, and Italy. 1. Rev., lxviii. 201.

"I am charmed by his account of Dr. Hutton, as indeed I was by his Illustrations. In many passages of both I was struck with the agreeable spectacle of the mere force of thought and knowledge, shooting and swelling into eloquence. I have seldom seen more happily exemplified

Vol. i. comprises Statics, Dynamics, Mechanics, Hydrostatics, Hydraulics, Aerostatics, and Pneumatics. Vol. ii. is occupied wholly with Astronomy. Vol. iii.—Optics, Electricity, and Magnetism—was never executed.

"An elementary work of great value."—Lord Jeffrey.

Vol. i. is reviewed in Lon. Month. Rev., lxxxii. 404–415, and vols. i. and ii. in Lon. Quar. Rev., viii. 149–163. Neither of the reviewers indulges in unmixed panegyric. Professor Playfair pub. many valuable papers in Trans. Roy. Soc. London, Trans. Edin. Roy. Soc., Edinburgh Review, and Encyclopædia Britannica, selections from which will be found in the collective edition of his Works on Natural Philosophy, Astronomy, Mathematics, and Physical Science, &c., including his Illustrations of the Huttonian Theory, with a Memoir of the author by [his nephew] James G. Playfair, and a Sketch of his Character by Francis Jeffrey, Edin., 1822, 4 vols. 8vo. Lord Jeffrey's Sketch was originally pub. in an Edinburgh paper of Aug. 1819; was repub. in the Annual Biography for 1820; and again reprinted in his lordship's Contrib. to Edin. Rev., 1853, 977–981. To Lord Jeffrey's pen we are also indebted for the memoir of Playfair in the Encyclopædia Britannica, vol. xviii. Among Playfair's best-known productions are the Life of Matthew Stewart, (Trans. Edin. Roy. Soc., i., 1788; Works, iv.;) Biographical Account of Dr. John Robison, (Trans. Edin. Roy. Soc., viii., 1815; Works, iv.;) papers in Edin. Rev., No. 10, Art. ix.; No. 18, Art. viii.; No. 22, Art. i.; No. 29, Art. i.; No. 42, Art. iii.; No. 46, Art. iii.; No. 51, Art. ii.; No. 60, Art. vi., (these eight papers are all included in vol. iv. of his Works, 1822, 4 vols. 8vo;) and especially the able treatise originally pub. in two Parts (yet left unfinished) in the Supplement to the Encyclopædia Britannica, 1816 and 1819,—now prefixed to the 8th edition of that excellent work, and entitled Dissertation Fourth: Exhibiting a General View of the Progress of Mathematical and Physical Science since the Revival of Letters in Europe. Respecting this celebrated Dissertation, already referred to, (see Mackintosh, Rt. Hon. Sir James, p. 1181, supra,) for which it is supposed at least £500 were paid to the author, it is needless to say much; but a few lines of quotation will perhaps not be unacceptable to the reader. It is thus noticed by the author of the Fourth Dissertation (we quote the opening sentence of his Introduction) prefixed to the Encyclopædia Britannica,—Sir John Leslie:

"The progress of Mathematical and Physical Science during the brilliant period which closed with Newton and Leibnitz, has been treated with fidelity and sustained interest by the hand of a master, whose calm judgment weighed impartially the different claims of discovery, whose powers of illustration could expand the fine results, and whose luminous eloquence was commensurate with the dignity of the subject."

"The opening tribute to Mr. Playfair," remarks Macvey Napier, "of whose history of the earlier progress of these sciences this [Sir John Leslie's] Discourse is a continuation, does honour alike to the writer's candour and taste."—Napier's Life of Leslie, Encyc. Brit., xiii.

Thus another of Playfair's fellow-contributors refers to his Dissertation:

"My late illustrious friend, who to his many other great and amiable qualities added the most perfect fairness and candour in his inquiries after truth."—DUGALD STEWART: First Dissert. to Encyc. Brit.

We subjoin the testimony of the remaining contributor of the Dissertations:

"There is no composition on the history of the Physical and Exact Sciences, in our language, which can be compared to that of Mr. Playfair in philosophical eloquence, except the noble work of his great predecessor, Mr. Maclaurin, on the Newtonian Discoveries."—SIR J. MACKINTOSH: Life, i., chap. vii.

"Not only one of the most instructive, but one of the most interesting, publications that philosophy has ever bestowed on the world."—LORD JEFFREY: Life of Playfair, in Encyc. Brit., vol. xviii.

See, also, Lord Jeffrey's Sketch, &c., (supra;) Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, i. 454, n.; ii. 231, n., 411, 412, 413; iii. 197; Morell's Mod. Philos., 2d ed., 1847, i. 90; Warren's Law Stu., 171; Edin. Rev., lxvi. 111, 132; South. Quar. Rev., Nov. 1856, (by Saml. Tyler.)

To the Encyclopædia Britannica Playfair contributed the article on Physical Astronomy and the valuable biographical account of Æpinus. We are unwilling to close this article without special notice of a paper referred to above,—the review of Traité de Mécanique Céleste, par P. S. Laplace, in Edinburgh Review, No. 22, Art. i., Jan. 1808, 249–284.

"There is no general account of the great facts and principles of astronomy so clear and comprehensive and exact, nor half so beautiful or majestic in the writing, as his account of Laplace's Mécanique Céleste."—LORD JEFFREY: Life of Playfair, supra.

"There is [in the Mercure de France, 1809] a translation, with remarks, by M. Biot, of Mr. Playfair's admirable review of Laplace."—SIR J. MACKINTOSH: Life, ii., chap. i.

As regards his general merits as a philosophical writer, few men have been so warmly eulogized by eminent critics:

"Professor Playfair's works exhibit a combination of the soundest philosophy, and of the profoundest science, with powers of eloquence and skill in composition which place the author in the first rank of our classic writers."—DUGALD STEWART.

"He was certainly one of the best writers of his age, and we do not now recollect any one of his contemporaries who was so great a master of composition. There is a certain mellowness and richness about his style, which adorns without disguising the weight and nervousness which is its other great characteristic,—a sedate gracefulness and manly simplicity in the more level passages,—and a mild majesty and considerate enthusiasm where he rises above them, of which we scarcely know where to find any other example."—LORD JEFFREY: Sketch, supra.

Professor Wilson is carried away by no such enthusiasm:

"He was a man of respectable powers and considerable acquirements, and wrote in a clear, lucid style and arrangement. This last was, after all, his greatest praise. That he was overpuffed in his own coteries, there is no one who will not now admit."—Blackw. Mag., Jan. 1826, Pref., xiii., where Christopher does not hesitate to express his opinion on the late eminent professor at some length, and with as much plainness as had before given no little offence: see Hypocrisy Unveiled and Calumny Detected in a Review of Blackwood's Magazine and "Christopher North," by Mrs. Gordon, 1862, 2 vols. p. 8vo.

"A person very remarkable for understanding, calmness, and simplicity."—SIR J. MACKINTOSH: Life, ii., chap. iv.

One of the latest commentators on Professor Playfair is Lord Cockburn; and he returns to the darling theme with delight, dwells on it with rapture, and leaves it with regret:

"Taking the whole man," exclaims his lordship, "his science, his heart, his manner, and his taste, I do not see how Playfair could have been improved. Profound, yet cheerful; social, yet always respectable; strong in his feelings, but uniformly gentle; a universal favourite, yet never moved from his simplicity; in humble circumstances, but contented and charitable,—he realized our ideas of an amiable philosopher. And is he not the best philosophical writer in the English language? . . . Nothing can be more just than the application made to him by Stewart (Elements of Philosophy, vol. iii. p. 313) of Marmontel's description of D'Alembert."—Memorials of his Time, chap. vi., 1856. Playfair, John. Agricultural Distress, Lon., 8vo.

Playfair, Lyon, LL.D., b. at Bengal, East Indies, 1819, the son of Dr. George Playfair, was educated at the University of St. Andrew's; subsequently studied chemistry at Glasgow with Prof. Thomas Graham, (p. 716, supra,) and continued his researches at Giessen under the eye and in the laboratory of Dr. Liebig. He has filled several responsible positions; in 1843 was appointed Professor of Chemistry at the Royal Institution of Manchester; was subsequently Chemist to the Museum of Economic Geology; and in 1855 became Sole Secretary of the Government Department of Science and Art, Marlborough House. In Dec. 1868 he was elected M.P. for Edinburgh and St. Andrew's Universities, over Mr. Sinnton, Conservative. To the students of scientific literature Dr. Playfair is favourably known as the author of papers on coal-gas, &c., in the Memoirs of the Museum of Economic Geology, Reports on the Health of Towns, articles on chemical analyses, &c., and as the translator of several of Liebig's Reports on the Progress of Organic Chemistry to the British Association, (see, also, HOFMANN, A. W., M.D.; JONES, H. BENCE, M.D., No. 5,) and as the co-translator (see GREGORY, WM., M.D., No. 10) of Liebig's Chemistry in its Application to Agriculture and Physiology: see Silliman's Journal, Jan. 1841; Loudon's Garden. Mag., March, 1841; GARDNER, JOHN, M.D.; TURNER, EDWARD, M.D.; WEBSTER, JOHN WHITE, M.D. The last ed. of Liebig's Familiar Letters on Chemistry in its Relations to Physiology, Dieteties, Agriculture, Commerce, and Political Economy, 4th ed., by John Blythe, M.D., Prof. of Chemistry, Queen's College, Cork, was pub., Lon., 1857, p. 8vo; with Addenda, N. York, 1859, 12mo; his Letters on Modern Agriculture, edited by John Blythe, M.D., appeared, Lon., 1859, p. 8vo; N. York, 1859, 12mo; and his Natural Laws of Husbandry, edited by John Blythe, M.D., was published, Lon., 1863, 8vo; N. York, 1863, 12mo.

To Dr. Playfair's publications should be added, On the Importance of Studying Abstract Science, &c., Lon., 1849, 8vo; On the Food of Man in Relation to his Useful Work, Edin., 1865, 8vo; The Cattle-Plague in its Relation to Past Epidemics and to the Present Attack, 1866, fp. 8vo.

To the Great Exhibition of 1851 Dr. Playfair rendered important services, which added to his well-earned reputation in the walks of practical science, and procured him the honour of the title of Companion of the Bath, and the position of Gentleman Usher in the Household of Prince Albert. In 1858 he was appointed Professor of Chemistry and Chemical Pharmacy in the University of Edinburgh. In 1862 he had charge of the Department of Juries in the London Exhibition.

Playfair, William, 1759–1823, a brother of Professor John Playfair, (ante,) the friend of Joel Barlow, the founder of the colony of Scioto, Ohio, an ingenious inventor, and the author of many books and pamphlets on politics and political economy, is now best known as the editor of 11th edit. of Smith's Wealth of Nations, with a Life and Notes, Supp. Chapters, &c., Lon., 1805, 3 vols. 8vo; the translator of Bœtticher's Statistical Tables, with a Supp. Table, 1804, 4to, and of D. F. Donant's Statistical Account of the U. S. of America, 1805, 8vo, pp. 72; and the author of the following works, now in little estimation: 1. Commercial and Political Atlas, 1786, 4to. 2. Hist. of Jacobinism, its Crimes, Cruelties, and Perfidies, 1793, 8vo; with an Appendix by Peter Porcupine, Phil., 1796, 2 vols. 8vo. This work should not be lost to the world. Plot, Robert, LL.D., 1640–1696, a native of Kent, educated at Magdalene College, Oxford; a Secretary of the Royal Society, 1682; Keeper of the Ashmolean Museum, and Prof. of Chemistry at Oxford, 1683–90; Historiographer to James II., 1688; Mowbray Herald Extraordinary, and Registrar of the Court of Honour, 1694–95; has the reputation of being the first who planned a general Natural History of England, (see CHILDREY, JOSHUA.) Of this noble design he left two valuable illustrations in—1. Natural History of Oxfordshire, being an Essay towards a Natural History of England, with Cuts, Oxf., 1677, fol.; 2d ed., with large Additions and Corrections; also a short Account of the Author, by [his step-son] John Burman, 1705, fol. Some of both eds. on l. p.

Plowden, Rev. Charles, b. in England, 1743; became a Jesuit, 1759; was made President of the R. Catholic College of Stonyhurst, Lancashire; d. at Jougue, Franche-Comté, when returning to England from Rome, 1821. He was a zealous advocate of the proposed organization of the Jesuits in England, and defended his views on that subject against C. Butler and J. Berington. 1. Remarks on the Writings of J. Berington, 1792, 8vo. 2. Remarks on Memoirs G. Panzani, &c., Liege, 1794, 8vo. See BERINGTON, JOSEPH. 3. Letters to C. Butler, &c., Reporters of the Cisalpine Club, Lon., 1796, 8vo. 4. Plowden, Edmund, 1517–1585, a member of an ancient Shropshire family; studied arts, philosophy, and physic for three years at Cambridge; began the study of the common law in the Middle Temple, 1539; removed to Oxford and devoted himself for four years to his books, and was there admitted to the practice of physic and surgery; returned to his "jealous mistress," and so zealously atoned for past neglect that he was made Summer Reader in the Middle Temple, 1557, Sergeant-at-Law, 1558, and Lent Reader, 1560. The name of Plowden is dear to all lawyers on account of his excellent collection entitled Les Commentaries ou Reports de divers Cases, esteants matters en ley, et de les arguments sur y ceux, en les temps des raignes les Roy Ed. les size, les Roigne Mary, le Roy et Roigne Ph. and Mary; et les Roigne Elizabeth. In French, Part 1, pub. Lon., 1571, fol.; both Parts subsequently in 1 vol. fol., as follows: 1578, 1584, 1588, 1599, 1613, 1684. Abridgment in French, by T. A., [Thomas Ashe,] 1607, 12mo. A trans. into English of this Abridgment, by Fabian Hicks, was pub., 1650, 1659, 12mo. There was also pub. in 1662, 12mo, an English trans. of Plowden's Quæries, (which will be found in French, appended to the last French ed. of the Commentaries, 1684, fol.,) under the title of Quæries; or, A Moot Book for Young Students Methodized, &c. by H. B. Plowden's Commentaries (trans. and edited by Mr. Broomly) appeared in English, with valuable References and the Quæries, in 1760, fol., and were repub., 1769, 2 vols. 8vo; 1779, fol.; Dubl., 1792, 2 vols. 8vo; Lon., 1816, 2 vols. 8vo. Plowden excuses himself (very needlessly) for printing his Commentaries, on the ground that his MSS. had been often incorrectly copied by those to whom he lent them: see his Preface. The excellence of Plowden's collection has been the theme of learned eulogists from his own day to ours,—from Lord Coke to Chancellor Kent.

"Works (as they well deserve) with all the profession of the law, of high account."—LORD COKE: Pref., 3 Rep.

His lordship, however, (see Lord Bacon's Works,) notes four erroneous cases.

"They are esteemed exquisite and elaborate commentaries, [10 Pref. Coke's Rep. 34,] and are of high account with all professors of the law."—Wood's Athen. Oxon., Bliss's ed., i. 503.

"Most deservedly bear as high a character as any book of reports ever published in our law."—HARGRAVE: Co. Lit., 23 a, n., Harg. and But. ed.

"Plowden's Commentaries embraced the same period as the reports of Dyer. [See DYER, DIER, or DEYER, SIR JAMES, ante.] They bear as high a reputation for accuracy as any ancient book of reports. . . . The work is . . . exceedingly interesting and instructive, by the evidence it affords of the extensive learning, sound doctrine, and logical skill of the ancient English bar."—1 Kent Com., 535, 8th ed., 1854.

The Protestants Camden and Fuller agree in commending this excellent Roman Catholic lawyer:

Plunket, Rev. William C. Sights to be seen in Dublin and Connemara, Lon., 1863, 18mo.

Plunket, Rt. Hon. William Conyngham, Lord, 176–1854, a native of Enniskillen, Ireland, where his father, Rev. Thomas Plunket, was a Presbyterian minister, was educated at Trinity College, Dublin; called to the Irish Bar, 1787, and immediately took a seat in the Irish House of Commons; Solicitor-General for Ireland, 1803, and Attorney-General, 1805–7; entered the British House of Commons, 1807; and there for fifteen years maintained an almost unequalled reputation for eloquence of the highest order; reappointed Attorney for Ireland, 1822, and held the post until 1827; created a peer of the United Kingdom, 1827, and in the same year made Lord Chief-Justice of the Common Pleas in Ireland, an office which he retained until 1830; Lord Chancellor of Ireland, 1830–41. From 1841 Lord Plunket withdrew from public life, and passed his closing years at his seat, Old Connaught, co. Wicklow. Shortly before his death he commenced the preparation of a collection of his speeches, intended for publication; but the work was left unfinished, and, indeed, he destroyed his papers. Since his death there has been pub. a collection (the first and only one) of his Speeches at the Bar and in the Senate; edited, with a Memoir and Historical Notices, by J. C. Hoey, Dubl., 1856. See Lon. Athen., June 28, 1856, 802. In addition to these Historical Notices, see Curran and his Contemporaries, by Charles Phillips; Wm. H. Law Rev., vi. 246; xix. 225–248; xxii. 234–248; PHILLIPS, CHARLES, No. 19. Sir James Mackintosh's opinion of the oratorical abilities of Lord Plunket, as expressed to Alexander H. Everett, has been already cited, (see PHILLIPS, CHARLES, ante,) and it will be observed that he made the same remark (see his Life, vol. ii., chap. vii.) to George Moore. See, also, Rush's Narrative of a Residence at the Court of London, Second Series. Our narrow limits forbid us to fortify the verdict of Sir James by copious citations to the same effect.

"His great fame rests upon his eloquence, in which he was surpassed by none in his own time, hardly by any orator of former ages."—LORD BROUGHAM: States. Time Geo. III., 335.

"Mr. Plunket, the greatest accession to parliamentary debaters that many years had produced, exerted a species of commanding eloquence and close reasoning in favour of concession to Roman Catholics which the House, already enriched with genius and talent from Ireland, had never yet witnessed from that country."—LORD HOLLAND: Memoir of the Whig Party, vol. ii.

"Lord Plunket was, in my opinion, the most powerful and able advocate the Catholics ever had. I will say that he, more than any other man, contributed to the success of the Roman Catholic Question."—SIR ROBERT PEEL.

The testimony of Mr. Canning (who duly appreciated the services to the same cause of Grattan, O'Connell, and Sydney Smith) is to the same effect. Perhaps Mr. Plunket's greatest speech on the Roman Catholic Question was delivered February 28th, 1821, (that which followed his motion regarding Catholic Emancipation,) which proved him, exclaimed Sir James Mackintosh, "the greatest master of eloquence and reasoning then existing in public life," and made it evident, remarks Sir Archibald Alison, "that if the mantle of Romilly had descended on Mackintosh, that of Grattan had fallen on the shoulders of Plunket." (Hist. of Europe, 1815–52, ii. 472.)

After his lordship's death, in 1854, a Memoir of his Life was promised,—to be written by Mr. Edward Berwick, President of Queen's College, Galway, and the grand-nephew of Grattan; but it would seem that this is to be one of the large class of books announced "in haste" and completed "at leisure"—or not at all. Pocock, Ebenezer. Flowers of the East: with an Introductory Sketch of Oriental Poetry and Music, Lon., 1833, 12mo.

Pocock, Edward, D.D., 1604–1691, a native of Oxford, entered of Magdalene Hall, Oxford, 1618; elected to a Scholarship of Corpus Christi College, 1620; B.A., 1622; Fellow, 1628; ordained priest, 1629; Chaplain to the English Factory at Aleppo, where he diligently studied the Arabic and other Eastern languages, 1630–36; first Prof. of Laud's Arabic Lecture at Oxford, 1636, and soon after, at Laud's request, embarked for Constantinople, where he resided, collecting ancient MSS., until 1640; Rector of Childrey, Berkshire, 1643; Hebrew Prof. at Oxford and Canon of Christ Church, 1648; ejected from his Canonry, 1650, but restored at the Restoration in 1660. In 1655 this great scholar was threatened by the Parliamentary Commissioners with the loss of his Hebrew and Arabic Professorships; but this disgrace to the Roundhead party was happily prevented by the determined opposition of Drs. John Owen, (himself one of the Commissioners,) Seth Ward, John Wilkins, and John Wallis, who withstood the stupid and bigoted creatures to their face, and made them sensible of "the infinite contempt and reproach" which would reward such treatment of a man "whom all the learned, not of England only, but of all Europe, so justly admired for his vast knowledge and extraordinary accomplishments." For a detailed account of the life, translations into Arabic, and other publications, of Pocock, we refer to the excellent biography of Leonard Twells, (infra,) and the authorities cited below. Poe, A. S. To Love and to be Loved; a Story, N. York, 1851, 12mo.

Poe, Edgar Allan, 1811–1849, a native of Baltimore, the grandson of David Poe, a soldier of the American Revolution, and a son of David and Elizabeth Arnold Poe, of the theatre, by the death of his parents in 1815 was left with his brother Henry and sister Rosalie in a state of "homeless poverty." Adopted by a kind-hearted merchant, Mr. Allan, of Baltimore, he was in 1816 placed at a school near London, and in 1822 removed to the University of Virginia, where he was equally distinguished as a scholar, an athlete, and a debauchee. In the first-named capacity he elicited the respect of his tutors, in the second the envy and admiration of his class-mates; in the third he offended the academical authorities and was expelled from the college. The refusal of Mr. Allan to provide funds for losses at the gambling-table aroused the ire of his reckless ward, and he determined to follow the example of his noble fellow-poet, Lord Byron, and aid the Greeks in their struggle for political and religious liberty. He never reached Athens, but in about a year after his departure from America was shipped home from St. Petersburg through the good offices of the American minister, Mr. Henry Middleton. Mr. Allan—whose long-suffering and endurance of Poe's waywardness will remind the reader of good Uncle Contarine's trials with Oliver Goldsmith,—see pp. 688–689, supra—again opened his arms to the prodigal, and placed him as a student at the Military Academy at West Point. The strict discipline of this excellent institution was by no means suited either to the temper or habits of the new cadet, and in less than a twelvemonth he received a significant intimation of the propriety of a change of residence. Poe again presented himself before Mr. Allan's door, and was again received into a household from which, for some unexplained offence, he was shortly to be ejected forever. Poe tells us that the cause of his dismission was the hostility engendered by his ridicule of Mr. Allan's choice in taking to his bosom (whilst Poe was at West Point) a wife too young in years to be a fitting successor to the first Mrs. Allan. But this would have been so slight an offence, compared with the ordinary character of Poe's transgressions, that it may be presumed the relief would have been agreeable to his benefactor. Neither the old husband (though Allan indeed was not an old husband) nor the young wife, in these ill-assorted unions, is apt to be offended with a little raillery on the score of disparity. In such cases both are victors, and the conquest of youth and of experience respectively may be considered about equipollent. Thrown now entirely upon his own resources, Poe determined to be of the number of those whose motto is "Tenui musam meditamur avena," ("we cultivate literature on a little oatmeal,") and he had, indeed, already solicited the attention of the public by a poetical pamphlet (pp. 71, 8vo) pub. at Baltimore in 1829, entitled Al Aaraaf, Tamerlane, and Minor Poems. (See Philobiblion, N. York, Nos. 2 and 4.) Some of these verses, written in his 16th, 17th, and 18th years, are thought to display powers of no ordinary cast. In 1833 he gained (by means of his beautiful chirography) a prize offered by the Baltimore Saturday Visitor by his tale entitled A Manuscript found in a Bottle; and May, 1835, to January, 1837, he edited the Southern Literary Messenger, pub. at Richmond. Whilst residing in this city, he married his cousin, Virginia Clemm. The lady survived the union about ten years; but the self-sacrificing devotion of her mother watched over the erring husband and the reckless widower until his latest hour, and then left the dead to bravely fight in vindication of that character from the irregularities of which she had long been the greatest sufferer. In 1837 Poe removed to Baltimore, then to Philadelphia, and at the close of the same year we find him in New York, and a contributor to the New York Review. In 1838 he pub. in book-form, with a continuation, a story commenced in the Southern Literary Messenger, entitled The Narrative of Arthur Gordon Pym, of Nantucket, N York, 12mo; repub. with Stories of Humour, and a few Essays, 1856, 12mo; repub. separately, Lon., Dec. 1861, fp. 8vo.

In the same year he returned to Philadelphia, and from May, 1839, to June, 1840, he discharged the editorial duties connected with Burton's Gentleman's Magazine. It was in the latter year that he gave to the world a collection of all the prose stories he had then written, under the title of Tales of the Grotesque and the Arabesque, Phila., 2 vols. 12mo. From November, 1840, to about April, 1842, he was editor of Graham's Magazine; in the spring of 1843 he gained a prize of $100 by his story of The Gold Bug, pub. in the Dollar Newspaper of Philadelphia. In this city, also, he proposed the publication of a monthly periodical to be called The Penn Magazine: on further thoughts he preferred the title of The Stylus; but the project got no further than the prospectus. In the autumn of 1844 he again removed to New York, where the fame of his tales of The Descent into the Mælstrom, The Premature Burial, The Purloined Letter, The Murders of the Rue Morgue, and (the sequel of the last) The Mystery of Marie Roget had revived the public curiosity respecting their author. This interest was redoubled in February of the next year by the publication, in the second number of Colton's Whig Review, of the poem of the Raven,—Poe's best-known production. In the same year, (1845,) after a six months' engagement with Willis and Morris as assistant editor of the Mirror, he became associated with Mr. Charles F. Briggs and Mr. Watson in the editorial management of the Broadway Journal. In October, 1845, this periodical passed entirely into his possession, and, as might have been surmised, it did not long survive the connection: the last number was pub. January 3d, 1846. Again left at liberty, he contributed to Godey's Lady's Book, May to November, 1846, a series of six papers entitled The Literati of New York City. They were pub. collectively, with additional sketches, together with Marginalia, Suggestions, and Essays, with a Sketch of the Author by R. W. Griswold, in a 12mo vol., pp. 607, N. York, 1850. This vol. is the third in the collective eds. of Poe's Works pub. by Redfield, 1856, 4 vols. 12mo. In the autumn and winter of 1846 (he was living at Fordham, a few miles from the city of New York) Poe's necessities elicited a generous appeal from a generous man,—N. P. Willis, in the Home Journal,—and a substantial response for a time relieved the res angusta domi,—which yet Poe was too proud to admit, and, indeed, denied in a remarkable letter pub. in the Home Journal, Dec. 30, 1846. In a few weeks after this date, a sick and suffering yet a loved and loving wife was removed from greater "evil to come." In February, 1848, Poe delivered at the Society Library in New York a lecture on the Cosmogony of the Universe, which he pub. in the same year under the title of Eureka, or The Universal, a Prose Poem, N. York, 12mo, pp. 144. It was reviewed in the (New York) Literary World, July 29, 1848, and in the ensuing September (20th) Poe pub. in the same periodical a letter addressed to C. F. Hoffman, the editor, in which he attacks his critic with more vigour than politeness. Shortly after this he became engaged to be married to "one of the most brilliant women of New England;" but the prospective groom took effective measures to prevent the consummation of the treaty, and the lady, thoroughly disenchanted, released the gentleman from the engagement,—if not without tears, certainly without regret. A few months later we find him again betrothed, and this time to a friend of his early youth; but exposure to the night air, resulting from the debility of intoxication, brought on a raging fever, of which he died, after two days' illness, at the Baltimore Hospital, October 7, 1849, at the age of thirty-eight years. This is but a sad story; and we should have liked it better ourselves had it told more of virtue and less of vice and of the deplorable fruits of transgression. But to have told aught but the truth would have proved us unfaithful chroniclers. That we have told less than the whole truth, or alleged truth, many of our readers can affirm,—and none better than those who are familiar with the remarkable record in which Poe's "literary executor," Dr. Griswold, has embalmed the least creditable points of his friend's character.

Mr. Willis says,—and we quote the words from a sense of justice,—

"We have heard, from one who knew him well, what should be stated in all mention of his lamentable irregularities,—that with a single glass of wine his whole nature was reversed; the demon became uppermost, and, though none of the usual signs of intoxication were visible, his will was palpably insane."

Mrs. Osgood bears testimony to his "Christian, graceful, and almost tender reverence for all women who won his respect," and to "the charming love and confidence that existed between his wife and himself," (letter to Dr. Griswold;) and the mother of that wife declares that "he was more than a son to myself, in his long-continued and affectionate observance of every duty to me."

There have been pub. the following collections of Poe's productions: 1. Tales, N. York, 1845, 12mo; 1849, 12mo. 2. Tales of Mystery, Imagination, and Humour; and Poems, Lon., 1852, 2 vols. 12mo. An edition of Poe's Works was published in Australia in 1868; and a new edition of Poetical Works, on toned paper, with portrait and illustrated frontispiece to the Raven, by John Tenniel, is now (1869) in preparation by W. J. Widdleton, New York. There is a book in the market, entitled The Conchologist's First Book, by Edgar A. Poe, Phila., 18mo. This is in fact an almost verbatim reprint of Captain Thomas Brown's Text-Book of Conchology, Glasgow, 1833. We do not choose to dwell on the story. It will be found in the International Magazine, Oct. 1850, (340, n.,) in which number was republished Griswold's Memoir of his late friend. On pp. 167–168 occurs a notice of Poe's writings from Fraser's Magazine. Another article on Poe from Fraser's Mag. will be found in Bost. Liv. A new memoir of Poe, by his friend Mr. Thomas C. Clarke, of Philadelphia, to be illustrated by letters as yet unpublished, has been for some time announced.

"Poe," remarks Mr. Gilfillan, "is distinguished by many styles and many manners. He is the author of fictions as matter-of-fact in their construction and language as the stories of Defoe, and of tales as weird and wonderful as those of Hoffman; of amatory strains trembling, if not with heart, with passion, and suffused with the purple glow of love, and of poems, dirges either in form or in spirit, into which the genius of desolation has shed its dreariest essence; of verses gay with apparent but shallow joy, and of others dark with a misery which reminds us of the helpless, hopeless, infinite misery which sometimes visits the soul in dreams."—Third Gallery of Lit. Port.

"The flow of all Poe's verse is remarkable for ease and gracefulness: it is hardly ever hampered by the difficulties of rhyme and rhythm which exist to a great degree in the metres of which he makes use. . . . A perusal of his critical essays leads us to the belief that his ability did not at all lie in that way. They are almost entirely taken up by minute verbal fault-finding: there is hardly any thing like the discussion of principles; and many of the papers are evidently dictated by personal spite, and afford us a very unfavourable notion of the tone of American journalism. [See our comments, p. 1125, ante, Longfellow, Henry Wadsworth.] But Poe's great power lay in writing tales, which rank in a class by themselves and have their characteristics strongly defined."—Fraser's Mag.; copied in Bost. Liv. Age, liv. 158, 159.

"In most of Edgar Poe's tales there is either an extravagance, as though they had been written by a man on the verge of delirium tremens, or else a laboured monotony, as though his resources were beginning to run dry."—Lon. Athen., 1852, 1856, 260.

"The poems, with their strange, unwholesome vigour, (nightmare verses, if such things can be,) speak for themselves. Their writer, apart from his works, had best be forgotten."—Ibid., 1852. 1425.

"Poe stands as much alone among verse-writers as Salvator Rosa among painters."—Lon. Spectator.

"Edgar A. Poe, in his 'Tales of the Grotesque and Arabesque,' evinces a genius in which a love of the marvellous and an intensity of conception are united with the wildest sympathies, as if the endowments of Mrs. Radcliffe and Coleridge were partially united in one mind."—H. T. Tuckerman: Sketch of Amer. Lit., 1852.

"There comes Poe with his raven, like Barnaby Rudge,
Three-fifths of him genius, and two-fifths sheer fudge.
* * * * * * *
Who has written some things quite the best of their kind,
But the heart somehow seems all squeezed out by the mind."
Lowell's Fable for Critics, ed. 1856, '59.

We can now add: Contes inédits d'Edgar Poe, traduits de l'Anglais par William Hughes, Lon., 1862.

"Edgar Poe's stories seem all of them to have been written under the inspiration of gin-and-water; but they contrast with wonderful advantage with the cold, forced extravagances of the foregoing work."—Lon. Athen., 1862, ii. 734.

Pole, Pool, or Polus, Reynold, or Reginald, 1500–1558, equally illustrious from his birth, piety, and learning, was a younger son of Sir Richard Pole, K.G., by Margaret, daughter of George, Duke of Clarence, brother to King Edward IV., and cousin-german to Elizabeth, Queen of Henry VII. and mother of Henry VIII. He was born at Stoverton (or Stourton) Castle, Staffordshire; educated at the Carthusian monastery at Shene, and at Magdalene College, Oxford; made Preb. of Salisbury, 1517, and, before he was nineteen, received the deaneries of Wimbourne Minster and Essex; opposed the unrighteous divorce of Henry VIII., who stripped him of his preferments, and, had he not left England for Rome, would in all probability have sent him to the block with More and Fisher; created Cardinal-Deacon of S. Nereus and Achilleus, 1536; one of the three Papal Legates to the Council of Trent, 1545; narrowly escaped the popedom on the death of Paul III., 1549; resided at the Benedictine monastery at Maguzano, 1549–53; Papal Legate to reconcile England to Rome on the accession of Mary, 1554; ordained priest, succeeded Cranmer as Archbishop of Canterbury, and elected Chancellor of the universities of Oxford and Cambridge, 1556; died Nov. 18, 1558, sixteen hours after the death of Queen Mary. See Life of Pole, by Abp. Beccatelli; in Italian, trans. by Duditus into Latin, Lon., 1690, 8vo, (see WHARTON, HENRY, No. 6,) and thence by Maucroix into French; from the Italian by Benj. VIII.: Cardinal Pole and the Anglican Ordinal. Cardinal Pole made some minor translations (printed and bound up with No. 4, infra) from St. Augustine, St. Chrysostom, St. Basil, St. Leo the Great, and St. Cyprian, and was the author of some Latin theological treatises, of which the following are the best-known: 1. Ad Henricum Octavum Britanniæ Regem pro Ecclesiasticæ Unitatis Defensione Libri Quatuor, folio, Romæ, apud Antonium Bladum, sine anno, sed circ. 1536? Very rare. Lord Guildford's copy was sold for £24. In the Bibliotheca Grenvilliana it is said that the book was suppressed: but it is more likely that it was never published: Pole promised not to publish it: see his letter to Henry, and also his letter to Edward VI., (Epistolæ, No. 1262.)

"Postea omnia quæ invenire potuit, exemplaria hujus libri (præterea quæ amicis tradiderat) collegit et flammit mandavit ipse Cardinalis."—BP. TANNER.

See, also, Schelhornii Am. Hist. Eccl. The trans. into English by Fabyance Wythers, entitled The Seditious and Blasphemous Oration of Cardinal Pole, &c., is said to have been pub. in 1560, (16mo,) but is sine anno. See WITHERS, FABIAN, No. 2.

2. Liber de Concilio, Venet., 1562, 8vo; Dillingæ, 1562; Romæ, apud Paul. Manutium, 1562, 4to. The first book printed at Rome by Paul Manutius. Rare. 3. Reformatio Anglice ex Decretis ipsius Sedis Apostolicæ Legati, Anno MDLVI., Romæ, apud Paul. Manutium, 1562, 4to. Renourd gives a long extract from this volume, "à cause de sa grande rareté."

"A treatise which, for perspicuity, good sense, and solid reasoning, is equal to the importance of the occasion on which it was written, and shows at once the reach and ease of the author's genius, and goodness of his heart. The preface by Manutius [containing a masterly sketch of Pole's character] is long, and is one of the most elegant pieces of composition in the Latin language."—Phillips on Sacred Literature.

4. De Summo Pontifice Christi in Terris Vicario, et de ejus Officio et Potestate; in modum Dialogi conscriptus, cum privilegio, Lovanii, apud Joannem Foulerum, Anglum, MDLXIX.

"It was written by way of dialogue in the conclave of cardinals, when they were electing him pope. He also wrote five other books on the same subject, when he was out of the conclave."

5. A Treatise of Justification founde among the Writinges of Cardinal Pole, &c., Lovanii, 1569, 4to. See an account of this vol. in Athen. Oxon., Bliss's ed., i. 293. Wood's account of Pole is very full. He declares that his "piety, learning, and integrity of life did make him more illustrious than the splendour of his royal blood."

Such testimonies we delight to adduce; and that the biographer does not permit his zeal to outrun the record will be seen from the following contemporaneous evidence, quoted by Mr. Prescott, (supra:)

"Such a one as, for his wisdom, joined with learning, virtue, and godliness, all the world seeketh and adoreth."—Letter of Sir John Mason to the Queen, MS.

"Cardinal Pole," says the Venetian minister temp. Philip and Mary, "is a man of unblemished nobility, and so strict in his integrity that he grants nothing to the importunity of friends. He is so much beloved, both by prince and people, that he may well be styled the king, where all is done by his authority."—Relatione di Gio Micheli, MS.

"The benign character of this prelate, the modesty and humanity of his deportment, made him be universally beloved; insomuch that in a nation where the most furious persecution was carried on, and where the most violent religious factions prevailed, entire justice, even by most of the reformers, has been done to his merit."—HUME: Hist. of Eng., ch. xxxvii.

York, to Appleton's there is appended an Analytical Index; Barnes's (School) ed. is illustrated by Notes by Prof. Boyd; and to Carters' is prefixed a Dissertation on the Genius of Robert Pollok, by Rev. James Scott, the editor of the Life, Letters, and Literary Remains of Robert Pollok, N. York, 12mo. The Life of Pollok, by his brother, was pub. at Edinburgh in 1843, p. 8vo; and to this work, and the authorities annexed, we refer the reader for fuller notices of Pollok and his principal production,—a poem the neglect of which by English critics is as observable as its popularity with Scotch and American readers. For his portion of this neglect Jeffrey was censured by Christopher North in Noctes Ambros., Dec. 1828, and Aug. 1834,—Blackw. Mag., xxiv. 695, xxxvi. 268; which, with vols. xxi. 844, xxvii. 677, and xxxi. 984, consult for critical notices of the Course of Time. Refer also to Chambers and Thomson's Dict. of Em. "The Course of Time, for so young a man, was a vast achievement. . . . He had much to learn in composition; and, had he lived, he would have looked almost with humiliation on much that is at present eulogized by his devoted admirers. But the soul of poetry is there, though often dimly enveloped, and many passages there are, and long ones too, that heave and hurry and glow along in a divine enthusiasm."—JOHN WILSON: Blackw. Mag., xxxi. 984.

"The 'Course of Time' is a very extraordinary poem: vast in its conception—vast in its plan—vast in its materials—and vast, if very far from perfect, in its achievement. The wonderful thing is, indeed, that it is such as we find it, and not that its imperfections are numerous. It has nothing at all savouring of the little or conventional in it; for he passed at once from the merely elegant and graceful."—D. M. MOIR: Sketches of Poet. Lit.

"Pollok's 'Course of Time,' much overlauded on its appearance, is the immature work of a man of genius who possessed very imperfect cultivation. It is clumsy in plan, tediously dissertative, and tastelessly magniloquent; but it has passages of good and genuine poetry."—PROF. SPALDING, Univ. of Saint Andrew's: Hist. of Eng. Lit., chap. xiv.

Pomfret, Henrietta Louisa Fermor, Countess of. Her Correspondence, &c.: edited by Louisa Fermor,(?) Countess of Pomfret. See HARTFORD, FRANCES, COUNTESS OF.

Pomfret, John, 1667–1703, a native of Luton, Bedfordshire; educated at Queen's College, Cambridge; became Vicar of Malden, and was presented to a living of greater value, institution into which was at first refused by Bishop Compton, in consequence of a misconstruction of a passage in the parson's poem of The Choice. Pomfret made a satisfactory vindication; but whilst he lingered in London, engaged in this business, he caught the smallpox, the fatal termination of which abruptly ended alike his anxieties and his hopes. A volume of his Poems—The Choice, and others—was pub. in 1699; and in 1724 appeared his Remains: a vol. containing two poetical pieces,—Reason, and Dies Novissima, or The Last Epiphany; a Pindaric Ode. This vol. was pub. by a friend, under the name of Philalethes. The 4th ed. of The Choice was pub. 1701, fol.; the Tenth Edition of his Poems on Several Occasions, with an Account of his Life and Writings, to which are added his Remains, was issued in 1740, 8vo. Many eds. of his Poems have since appeared; and they are repub. in Johnson's and Chalmers's collections.

"His 'Choice' exhibits a system of life adapted to common notions and equal to common expectations; such a state as affords plenty and tranquillity, without exclusion of intellectual pleasures. Perhaps no composition in our language has been oftener perused than Pomfret's 'Choice.' In his other poems there is an easy volubility; the pleasure of smooth metre is afforded to the ear, and the mind is not oppressed with ponderous or entangled with intricate sentiment. He pleases many; and he who pleases many must have some species of merit."—DR. JOHNSON: Lives of the Poets.

The vol. containing Pomfret's Poems, Southey tells us, (Life and Corresp., chap. i.,) was one of the companions of his early days, and (for who does not remember with a melancholy pleasure his "first books"?) he seems to have contracted a lasting admiration for the bard. At least this is a fair inference from his query,

"Why is Pomfret the most popular of the English Poets? the fact is certain, and the solution would be useful."—Specimens of the Later English Poets, 1807, i. 91.

To this Mr. Campbell responds,—but his quotation is not accurate,—

"It is asked, in Mr. Southey's 'Specimens of English Poetry,' why Pomfret's 'Choice' is the most popular poem in the English language: it might have been demanded, with equal propriety, why London Bridge is built of Parian marble."—Campbell's Specimens.

The best proof of Pomfret's loss of popularity is the fact that in a day distinguished for the republication of the earlier poets, Pomfret is neglected. Mr. Hallam is no exception to this distaste:

"Then came Blackmore, with his epic poems of Prince Arthur and King Arthur, and Pomfret, with his Choice, both popular in their own age, and both intolerable, by their frigid and tame monotony, in the next."—Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, iii. 489.

Pond, Gideon H. See RIGGS, REV. STEPHEN, No. 1.

Pond, John, 1767?–1836. after finishing his education at Trinity College, Cambridge, travelled for some years on the Continent; subsequently resided at Westbury, near Bristol, until his marriage, in 1807, when he removed to London; succeeded Dr. Maskelyne as Astronomer-Royal in 1811, and retired from this office upon a pension in the autumn of 1835. He finished his Catalogue of 1113 stars (the largest of those which were considered trustworthy) in 1833. In his controversy with Brinkley on the parallax of the fixed stars, he is now generally thought to have been correct in his assertion that the latter "did not prove the existence of a sensible amount of parallax." 1. Astronomical Observations made at the Royal Observatory at Greenwich, 1811–12, 42*s.*; 1813–35, each 21*s.* Mr. Pond also contributed the Introduction to Astronomy prefixed to Pinkerton's Geography, (see PINKERTON, JOHN, No. 19;) wrote many of the scientific articles in Rees's Cyclopædia; and pub. numerous and valuable papers in the Transactions of the Royal and Royal Astronomical Societies. Mr. Pond's early zeal and success in his astronomical pursuits have been gracefully commemorated by Sir Humphry Davy; the merit and originality of his method of observation elicited the eulogies of Arago, Biot, Delambre, Bessel, and Schumacher; and the Astronomical Society has recorded on its archives that "It is not too much to say that the meridian sidereal observation (which excludes the Herschelian branch of astronomy) owes more to him than to all his countrymen put together since the time of Bradley."

The next work of Mr. Poole's must be prefaced by a brief explanation. In 1660, Cornelius Bee, an enterprising publisher of London, printed in that city a most valuable collection, in Latin, of the critical annotations on the Old and New Testaments of ninety of the most learned men in Europe, entitled Critici Sacri, 9 vols. fol. It was designed to be a companion to Walton's Biblia Sacra Polyglotta, Lon., 1657, 6 vols. fol. The editors of the Critici Sacri were Bp. Pearson, John Pearson, Anthony Scattergood, and Francis Gouldman. A 10th vol., fol., entitled Commentaria et Disputatione in Epistoliam Pauli ad Hebræos, &c., sometimes accompanies the 9 vols. of the Critici Sacri. This great work was reprinted at Frankfort, cura Gurtler, in 1695, 7 vols. fol., also in 7 vols. 4to. This ed. is badly printed. In 1698 an excellent ed. was printed at Amsterdam, 8 vols. in 9 vols. fol. This is the edition which the librarian or the student must procure; and he must add to it the admirable Supplements, viz.: Thesaurus Theologico-Philologicus, Amst., 1701, 2 vols. fol.: Thesaurus Novus-Philologicus, 1732, 2 vols. fol.: in all, Amst., 13 vols. fol. A Table of the contents of the whole 13 vols. will be found in Darling's Cyc. Bibliog., vol. i., Authors, 815–826.

Mr. Poole, conceiving that an abridgment of the Critici Sacri, with additions in some parts, all methodically arranged throughout, would prove useful, prepared with great labour his (8) Synopsis Criticorum aliorumque Sacræ Scripturæ Interpretum, also in Latin, 4 vols. in 5, fol., pub. as follows: I. Gen.–Esth., 1669; II. Job–Cantic., 1671; III. Esaia.–Malach., 1673; IV. Pars 1, Matthæus–Acta Apost., 1674; IV. Pars 2, Rom.–Apoc.; Index Vocum Hebraicarum, Index Vocum Græcarum, Index Rerum, 1676. Some copies on thick paper, and some on large paper. When the first vol. was ready for the press, Mr. Bee, the proprietor of the Critici Sacri, accused Poole of invading his rights, which were secured by patent; but the controversy was decided in Poole's favour, and apparently to Bee's satisfaction, as his name appears as a vendor in the title-page of vol. i. See The Case between Mr. Pool and Mr. Cornelius Bee Considered and Decided, s. a., 4to. Cornelius Bee is the "industrious stationer" celebrated by Fuller (Worthies, ed. 1843, ii. 237) as "foster-father to many worthy books, to the great profit of posterity." The Synopsis was repub. as follows: I. Frankfort, 1678, 5 vols. fol. II. Utrecht, cura Joh. Leusden, 1684, 5 vols. fol. The best ed. III. Frankfort, with Pref. by Maius, 1694, 5 vols. large 4to. In small and bad print, and very incorrect. IV. Frankfort, 1709, 5 vols. fol. V. Frankfort, with Pref. by Pritius, 1712, 5 vols. fol. Worse than No. III. To Leusden's ed. of this work the student should add J. C. Wolf's Curæ Philologicæ et Criticæ in Novum Testamentum, etc.; Hamburg, 1732–35, 5 vols. 4to, or Basil, 1741, 5 vols. 4to, (best ed.;) and the continuation by J. C. Koecher, entitled Analecta Philologica et Exegetica in Quatuor Evangelia, Altenburgi, 1766, 4to. Of Wolf's Curæ Philologicæ an eminent critic remarks,

"This work has some resemblance, in the manner of its composition, to Poole's Synopsis, but is written with more judgment, and contains the opinions of many expositors who have lived since the publication of Poole's work."—Bishop Watson.

When he places these twenty-four volumes (including the Critici Sacri) on his shelf beside his Ximenes' and Walton's Polyglots, Castell's Lexicon, and Grinfield's Novum Testamentum Græcum, Editio Hellenistica, he may reckon himself prepared for any polemical emergency. Poole laboured at his Synopsis for about ten years, rising about three or four o'clock in the morning and working without intermission—save to swallow a raw egg about eight o'clock and another at twelve o'clock—until late in the afternoon,—when he unbent his mind in friendly visits and cheerful conversation: an excellent custom. As the price of the Critici Sacri (then, 1660, 9 vols. fol.) was £13 10*s.*, and of the Synopsis £5 10*s.*, we need not be surprised at the fact that 3800 sets of vols. i.–iv. (as bound, but really vols. i.–iii. and Part 1 of vol. iv.) were sold before vol. v. (really Part 2 of vol. iv.) had made its appearance. But how was the work performed?

"The object of the Synopsis is to condense, combine, and exhibit at one view the interpretations of Scripture dispersed through the Critici Sacri, previously published by Bee. The author has done this very successfully. He has omitted much that is useless in that work, abridged many prolix discussions, and added many other writers to those contained in the Sacred Critics. . . . It is much more convenient than the Critici Sacri, and contains, in a most accessible form, the views of not less than one hundred and fifty writers on the Scriptures. It consequently serves instead of many books now difficult to be obtained. . . . I can also say, from a long acquaintance with it, that a vast deal of what is important in the works of modern critics will be found in the learned volumes of the Synopsis. In his prefaces the author gives an account of the several writers whose works he introduces, with characters of them which deserve to be consulted with attention."—Orme's Bibl. Bib., 359.

"For when the excellent Mr. Pool had finished his laborious and immortal task, it was noted by some considerable persons, 'That, wanting assistance to collect for him many miscellaneous criticisms, occasionally scattered in other authors, he left many better things behind him than he found.'"—Cotton Mather: Magnalia, Gen. Introd., ed. 1852, 33.

"I beseech the theological collector not to let a fine copy of good old Matthew Poole's 'Synopsis Criticorum' . . . slip through his fingers without becoming master of it."—Dibdin's Lib. Comp., 52.

"The plan of it was judicious, and the execution more free from errors than seems consistent with so great a work, finished in so short a time, by one man."—Granger's Biog. Hist. of Eng., 5th ed., 1824, v. 65.

"The work of Pool was evidently a more original labour than the former, [Critici Sacri.]"—Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, iii. 298.

"Besides the great advantage of digesting the Critici Sacri into one view, it contains later editions, and the unevangelical criticisms of his originals are noticed and refuted by sound and evangelical criticism. The Critici Sacri is a mixture without discrimination."—Bickersteth's C. S., 4th ed., 1844, 392.

"It has many advantages over the Critici Sacri, not only in point of size, but in its admirable arrangement and concentration of evidence, and in the author's remarks; and it furnishes a most complete material index to the Critici Sacri. So that, upon the whole, the Synopsis will be preferred to the original by many besides the author of this note."—Hale's Chronology, ii., Pref. xviii.

But not by all:

"The Critici Sacri is the most important collection of Biblical Critics ever made. In point of size the work of Poole has advantages; but no man who is acquainted with both works will ever prefer the Synopsis to the original."—Dr. Adam Clarke.

York, 1852, 3 vols. imp. 8vo, $10. Mr. Pool's object in this work was to produce an English Synopsis of Annotations collected out of the Latin Synopsis and divers other learned interpreters, for the use of vulgar capacities. He lived to carry the work down to the end of the 58th Chapter of Isaiah, only. The authors of the remainder of vol. i. and of vol. ii. were as follows: Isaiah lix., lx., Mr. Jackson; the remaining chapters of Isaiah, and Jeremiah and Lamentations, Dr. Collinges; Ezekiel, Mr. Hurst; Daniel, Mr. Cooper; Minor Prophets, Mr. Hurst; the Evangelists, Dr. Collinges; Acts, Mr. Vinke; Romans, Mr. Mayo; Corinthians and Galatians, Dr. Collinges; Ephesians, Mr. Veale; Philippians and Colossians, Mr. Adams: Timothy, Titus, Philemon, Dr. Collinges; Hebrews, Mr. O. Hughes; James, Peter, Jude, Mr. Veale; St. John's Epistles, Mr. Howe; Revelation, Dr. Collinges.

A German translation of the work was undertaken by Augustus Titellius, and a first part of it published; but it was never completed. We have no difficulty in adducing testimonies to the value of the Annotations.

"The Notes are short, but abound with good sense and sound judgment."—Dr. Adam Clarke.

"In critical points accurate, on historical subjects perspicuous."—Hervey.

"Of admirable use."—Matthew Henry.

It will be remembered that Philip Henry bequeathed a copy of the Annotations to each of his four daughters.

"I have added very largely from Mr. Poole, in order to the understanding those words Mr. Henry does not explain."—JOHN WESLEY.

"If we must have commentators, as we certainly must, Poole is incomparable, and, I had almost said, abundant of himself."—RICHARD CECIL.

"What is done by Poole is highly valuable, and is of use not only for occasional inspection, but also for diurnal meditation."—COTTON MATHER.

"The Annotations are mingled with the text, and are allowed to be very judicious."—Horne's Bibl. Bib., 254.

"A very judicious work."—Williams's C. P., 284.

"Judicious and full."—Bickersteth's C. S., 394.

To these favourable opinions can be added those of Bishop Tomline, (who includes the Annotations in his list of works recommended to clergymen,) Doddridge, and Gilpin. Orme says that the notes of all the commentators "are of a useful and practical nature. Poole's own part is scarcely equal to what might have been expected from the author of the Synopsis. There is not much criticism in it, which perhaps he thought sufficiently supplied in the Latin work."—Bibl. Bib., 360.

Poole was also the author of a poem and two epitaphs upon Jeremy Whitaker, two epitaphs on Richard Vines, and another on Jacob Stock, a preface to Nolton's Serms., (see NOLTON, JAMES,) and some of the sermons in the Morning Exercises at Cripplegate, (see MATHER, COTTON, D.D., No. 11.)

It is no slight evidence of the excellence of Poole's character and the solidity of his learning, that, although a Dissenter, he enjoyed the friendship and esteem of such men as Bishops Lloyd, Tillotson, Reynolds, and many other prelates of his time, (who zealously promoted the preparation of his great work;) and even from the gruff old Churchman Anthony Wood is extorted the confession that the volumes of the Synopsis are "very admirable and useful books, for which we are bound to give him thanks," and he testifies that he left behind him "the character of a very celebrated critic and casuist."
